The streets are narrow, intolerably filthy in wet weather, and dusty in dry. Since the conquest of Georgia, by the Russians, in 1801, Teflis has been the residence of their governor and commander in chief, who has always a great force stationed here under him. Many improvements have lately been made in the city ; some of the streets have been paved, ruinous houses repaired or pulled down, and new ones built on an improved plan, and the great bazar, or market place for merchants, has been fitted up in a new style. The city contains a large caravansary, a hospital, an arsenal, and a Cath. ch., a number of Armenian and Greek churches, several of them fine buildings. The largest is the Armenian cathedral church of Holy Zion, but the Roman Catholic is the most beautiful. The houses are built of dun brick mingled with stones and mud, with doors and windows exceedingly small ; the latter covered with paper, glass being little used. Many of the dwellings are mere mud huts.

Teflis has been long celebrated for its baths, which are situated at one extremity of the bazar. They are 10 in number ; a part of them appropriated to the women. They form not only a resource in sickness to the natives, and to travellers visiting them with the same object, but are the daily resort of both sexes, as places of luxury and amusement. They are open to all ranks indiscriminately, and the place is kept intolerably filthy. The water in the fountains is of the temperature of 82°, strongly impregnated with sulphur, and accounted a sovereign remedy for the rheumatism, ulcers, &c.

Tehama, sandy belt, which surrounds the peninsula of Arabia, beginning at Suez, and extending to the mouth of the Red sea. Its breadth is various ; it is, however, for the most part, about 2 days' journey from the sea shore to the rise of the hills ; at least this is the breadth of the plain adjacent to the Red sea. It bears every mark of having been anciently a part of the bed of the sea.

Teheran, or Tehraun, city, Persia, in Irak Agemi ; 60 SE. Casbin, 65 S. Caspian sea, 300 N. Ispahan. Lon. 50. 52. E. Lat. 35. 40. N. Pop. in the winter about 60,000. During the two last reigns it has been the seat of government, and the residence of the sovereign. Its situation is low and unhealthy, but striking, having on the south the ruins of the immense and ancient city of Rai, and on the north and east the lofty mountain ranges of Elburz and Demavend. It is 4 miles in circuit, surrounded by a strong wall, built of bricks baked in the sun, flanked by numerous towers, with a broad dry ditch, with a glacis between it and the wall. It has 6 gates, 7 mosques, 3 colleges, and numerous baths and caravansaries. The houses are built of unburnt brick, and the city has a mud-like appearance. It contains no edifice of importance except the ark, which combines the character of a citadel with a royal palace, and has considerable strength. During the summer months it is very unhealthy, and in that season the king pitches his tents in the plains of Sultania, or Unjan, and most of the inhabitants follow the royal camp; so that Teheran cannot then boast more than 10,000.

Tejuco, or the Diamond District, district, Brazil, 16 leagues long from N. to S., and 8 wide; mountainous and extremely barren, and valuable only for its diamond mines. The diamonds obtained during the first 20 years after the discovery, are said to have exceeded 1000 ounces in weight. Since 1772 these mines have been in the hands of government, and they are under the direction of various officers, both civil and military. During the period of 5 years, from 1801 to 1806 inclusive, the expenses were £204,000, and the diamonds sent to the treasury at Rio Janeiro weighed 115,675 carats. The value of gold found, in the same period, amounted to £17,300; from which it appears, that the diamonds cost government £1. 13s. 9d. per carat. A vast quantity is smuggled.

Tejuco, t. Brazil, capital of the above district, on the side of a hill, on the Jigitonbonha, 400 N. Rio Janeiro, 500 S. by W. St. Salvador. Lon. 42. 30. W. Lat. 18. 11. S. Pop. 6,000. It is very irregularly built, the streets uneven, but the houses in general are well constructed and in good condition compared with other towns in the interior. The vicinity is entirely barren, and the inhabitants derive their provisions from farms several leagues distant. A great portion of the inhabitants are without employment, and bear marks of penury and wretchedness. The annual sum paid by government for the hire of negroes, salaries of officers, and various necessities, as iron and nitre, is not less than £35,000, and this added to the demands of the inhabitants of the town and vicinity, occasion a considerable trade. The shops are stocked with English manufactures, which are brought by mules from Rio Janeiro and St. Salvador; the commodities sent to those ports from Tejuco and Minas Novas, consist of diamonds, amethysts, topazes, and other precious stones.—This town, being the centre of the diamond district, is under the absolute government of the intendant of the province, which is placed under very strict regulations.

Tempe, Vale of, a beautiful and celebrated valley, Thessaly, on the Peneus, not far from its mouth, having Mount Olympus on the north, and Mount Ossa on the south. It is about 5 miles long, and of unequal breadth. It was much celebrated by the ancient poets; but modern travellers were long perplexed to find in so rugged and terrific a spot as the defile of Tempe, where it is crossed by the great road, the object of their unqualified panegyric; but the fact is that the Vale of Tempe is distinct from the gorge or defile, being situated a little to the south-west. 'The scenery of this beautiful valley,' says a late traveller, 'fully gratified our expectations. In some places it is sylvan, calm, and harmonious, and the sound of the water of the Peneus accords with the grace of the surrounding landscape; in others it is savage, terrific and abrupt, and the river roars with violence, darkened by the frown of stupendous precipices.' The woods, which once appear to have adorned this celebrated region, have been much diminished in the service of the neighbouring cotton works; but the mountains on each side are truly sublime. In the centre of this romantic seclusion stands Ambelakia, a town inhabited by Greeks with some Germans, who have established considerable cotton manufactures.

Tenedos, called by the Turks, Bogdscha, or Bogtcha-Adassi, isl. in the Grecian Archipelago, about 20 miles in circ., near the coast of Asia, and not far from the Dardanelles. Lon. 26. E. Lat. 39. 53. N. Pop. about 7,000, about two thirds Turks, & 1 third Greeks. Sq. m. 35. It was first called Leucophrys. The Greeks when they feigned to return into their country, and abandon the siege of Troy, lay concealed behind this island. Tenedos is rocky but fertile, and produces the finest wine in the Archipelago. Its position near the mouth of the Hellespont has always made it important. Vessels bound to Constantinople find shelter in its ports, or safe anchorage in the road, during the contrary winds, and in foul weather. The principal town is of the same name, and has a population of about 5,000, with a harbour and citadel. The harbour has been enclosed in a mole, of which no part now appears above water, but loose stones are piled on the foundations to break the waves. The basin is encompassed with a mountainous ridge. On the S. side is a row of windmills and a small fort; opposite is a castle by the shore. The houses, which are numerous, stand at the foot or slope of a hill, with a flat between them and the sea.

Teneria, t. Cuba; 45 NW. Villa del Principe.

Teneriffe, one of the Canary islands, the second in rank, but the first in size & population, situated off the western coast of Africa; of triangular form, each side being about 36 miles in length. Sq. m. about 700. Pop. in 1768, 66,654; stated by Hassel, in 1817, at 80,000; by some at 100,000. The chief town is Santa Cruz. As a natural object, it is chiefly remarkable for its mountain summit, called the Peak of Teneriffe, of the sloping sides of which the island actually consists. Its commercial importance depends chiefly on its wine, of which from 10,000 to 15,000 pipes are annually exported; though inferior to Madeira, yet being afforded cheaper, it is in considerable demand. Teneriffe also exports orchilla weed, rose wood, and a few other trifling articles. The climate, on the coast, is hot; but at the elevation of 2,000 feet it is cool and exceedingly agreeable; the cultivated parts are extremely fertile, and produce orange, myrtles, cypress, date, and chestnut trees; vines, wheat, cocoa, coffee, sugar cane, &c. Delightful views are in some parts presented. Humboldt declares that he never beheld a more beautiful landscape than is seen in crossing the hilly tract, near Laguna.

The elevation of the Peak, according to the measurement of Cordier, is 12,166; according to another measurement 12,358. In ascending it, the first eminence is called Monte Verde, or the green mountain, from the high fern, with which it is covered. Beyond this is the Mountain of Pines, which are said to have formerly grown there in great abundance. After passing this summit, the traveller reaches a plain, called by the natives Mouton de Trigo, on which the peak in reality stands. It is a mountainous platform, rising more than 7,000 feet above the level of the sea. The Piton or sugar loaf summit is very steep, and can be ascended only on the east and southeast sides. At the elevation of 9,786 feet, is a sandy platform of pumice stones, bordered by two enormous currents of vitreous lava; beyond it the acclivity is very steep, the currents of lava being covered with great masses of scoriæ, extremely rough and sharp. Towards the summit, nothing but pumice stone is to be seen. The crater is of an elliptical form, about 1,200 feet in circ., but has long since ceased to emit flames; and the summit may be considered as a solfatara or extinguished volcano. From the flanks of the mountain several violent eruptions have taken place within the present century. The view from the top of the Peak is peculiarly beautiful. With the steep and naked declivities of the mountain, is contrasted the smiling aspect of the country beneath, with the towns & villages, the sails of vessels in the harbours, and beyond a vast extent of ocean, studded with the archipelago of the Canary islands.

Tennessee, r. U. S., which rises from the Alleghany mountains, on the borders of N. C. It crosses the state of Tennessee in a SW. direction, enters Alabama, then pursues a westerly course for 150 or 200 miles, then takes a northern course, crosses the state of Tennessee again, and the western part of the state of Kentucky, and joins the Ohio, 12 m. below the Cumberland, and 46 above the Mississippi. It is about 1,100 miles long, & navigable for steam boats, at high swells, 259 miles to Florence, in Alabama, at the lower end of the Muscle shoals, and for boats at all seasons. Here it widens, and becomes too shallow for boats to pass when the water is low. Above the shoals, boats pass without obstruction 250 miles to the Suck, or Whirl, where the river breaks through the Cumberland mountains. Just as the river enters the mountains, a great rock projects from the northern shore, which causes a sudden bend in the river. The water is thrown with great violence against the southern shore, whence it rebounds around the point of the rock, and produces the whirl. The river is here compressed to the width of about 70 feet. Boats ascend and descend the whirl without great difficulty.

TENNESSEE, one of the U. S., bounded N. by Kentucky, E. by North Carolina & Virginia, S. by Georgia, Alabama, and Mississippi, & W. by the Mississippi. Lon. 81. 28. to 91. 37. W. Lat. 35. to 36. 30. N.; 420 miles long, and 102 broad. Sq. miles about 40,000. Pop. in 1790, 35,691; in 1800, 105,602; in 1810, 261,727; in 1820, 420,813: slaves 69,064. Militia 36,146.

This state is divided by the Cumberland mountains into two divisions, East Tennessee and West Tennessee.

Towns. Murfreesborough is the seat of government. The other most considerable towns in West Tennessee are Nashville, Franklin, Fayetteville, Shelbyville, Columbia, Clarkesville, Carthage, & Gallatin; in East Tennessee, Knoxville, Jonesborough, Greenville, & Rogersville.

Education, &c. Four colleges have been incorporated in this state, at Knoxville, Nashville, Greenville, and in Washington county. There are academies at Knoxville, Nashville, Carthage, Murfreesborough, Rogersville, Gallatin, Fayetteville, and near Franklin, Springfield, Lebanon, and Clarkesville. The principal denominations of Christians in Tennessee are Baptists, Methodists, and Presbyterians.

Government. The legislature is composed of a senate and house of representatives; the members of each, together with the governor, are chosen biennially, on the first Thursday in August and the day succeeding. The meeting of the general assembly is on the third Monday in September.

Rivers. The principal rivers are the Tennessee, Cumberland, Holston, Clinch, French-Broad, Notahacky, Hiwassee, Tellico, Duck, Reelfoot, Obian, Forked Deer, and Wolf.

Face of the country. Tennessee is marked by bold features. It is washed by the great river Mississippi on the west, and the fine rivers Tennessee and Cumberland pass through it in very serpentine courses. The western part is undulating; some of it level; in the middle it is hilly; and the eastern part, known by the name of East Tennessee, abounds in mountains, many of them lofty, and presenting scenery peculiarly grand and picturesque. Of these mountains the Cumberland, or Great Laurel Ridge, is the most remarkable. Stone, Yellow, Iron-Bald, Smoky, and Unaka mountains join each other, and form, in a direction nearly NE. and SW., the eastern boundary of the state. North-west of these, and separated from each other by valleys of from 5 to 15 m. wide, are Bay's mountain, Copper Ridge, Clinch mountain, Powell's mountain, and Welling's Ridge.

The last four terminate N. of Tennessee river. They are all encircled by valleys, which open passages for rivers and roads, and which, together with the numerous cascades, render the views very sublime. Caves of great depth and extent are found throughout the state.

Soil and productions. The geological formation of this state is wholly secondary, except a small portion of the eastern part, which is transition, and numerous spots on the banks of rivers, which are alluvial. A considerable portion of the state is bedded on limestone. A large deposit of gypsum has been discovered. Copperas, alum, nitre, and lead are among the minerals. Some silver has been found. Coal is supposed to be plentiful. Saltpetre is so abundant as to form a great article of commerce. There are several mineral springs, and many valuable salt springs. The soil in a country so uneven must be very various. The western part of the state has a black, rich soil; in the middle are great quantities of excellent land; in the eastern part, the mountains are lean, but there are many fertile valleys. There is a great profusion of natural timber, poplar, hickory, walnut, oak, beach, sycamore, locust, cherry, sugar-maple, &c., and in many places are great quantities of cane remarkably thick and strong. The state also abounds with medicinal plants, such as snake-root, ginseng, Carolina pink, angelica, senna, annise, spikenard, &c. Tennessee is also well supplied with animals and birds of various kinds, and the rivers abound in divers sorts of fish.—The great business of the state is agriculture. The soil produces abundantly cotton and tobacco, which are the staple commodities. The inhabitants also raise a plentiful supply of grain, grass, and fruit. They export cotton, tobacco, and flour in considerable quantities; also saltpetre and many other articles. The principal commerce is carried on through the Tennessee and Cumberland rivers, and from them through the Ohio and Mississippi to New Orleans. This state also supplies Kentucky, Ohio, &c. with cotton for inland manufactures; and from East Tennessee considerable numbers of cattle are sent to the seaports on the Atlantic. It is probable that a new avenue to commerce will soon be opened, by means of roads or a canal, between the Tennessee river and the navigable waters of the Tombeckbee.

Climate. The climate is generally healthy. In East Tennessee the air is so tempered by the mountain air on one side, and by refreshing breezes from the gulf of Mexico on the other, that this part of the state has one of the most desirable climates in North America. The middle part resembles Kentucky in climate. The winter in Tennessee resembles the spring in New England. Snow seldom falls to a greater depth than 10 inches, or lies longer than 10 days. Cumberland river has been frozen over but three times since the country was settled. Cattle are rarely sheltered in winter. In the western parts there are some low bottoms, on which the inhabitants are subject to bilious fevers, and fever and ague in the autumn.

Indians. The Chickasaws possess all the western parts of this state, between the Missisissippi and Tennessee. The Cherokees own a large tract near the southeast part, on the Hiwassee.

Tennessee Ridge, mountains in the state of Tennessee, between the rivers Tennessee and Cumberland.

Tennis, (an. Tennessus,) t. Egypt; 28 SE. Damietta. Lon. 32. 14. E. Lat. 31. 2. N. It is situated on an island in a lake of the same name; once a large city, built by the Romans, on the site of a more ancient Egyptian town. Here are at present nothing but ruins, which the neighbouring inhabitants are constantly digging up and removing for building near.

Tequery Bay, bay on SE. coast of Cuba, near Cape Cruz.

Tequendema, (Cataract of), a remarkable fall of the Bogota or Funza, New Grenada; about 15 SW. Santa Fe de Bogota. The river rises in the great plain in which Santa Fe de Bogota is situated. A little above the fall the breadth is diminished from 140 to 35 feet, when with accumulated force it rushes down a perpendicular rock at two bounds, to the astonishing depth of 600 feet, into a dark unfathomable gulf, out of which the river again issues under the name of the Meta. In the fall of this river may be observed a strange variety of climate. The plain of Bogota is covered with crops of wheat, with oaks, elms, and other productions of a temperate region: at the foot of the fall are seen the palms of the equinoctial low lands. The loneliness of the spot, the dreadful noise, the dense mass of vapour, and the beauty of the vegetation, render this situation one of the wildest and most picturesque scenes in Andes.

Tercera, or Terceira, one of the Azores islands, supposed to have derived its name from its standing the third in this cluster of islands, in point of situation, though the first in dignity.

It is 25 miles long, and 15 broad. Pop. 28,900. Its figure is almost circular, the coasts high, and so surrounded with craggy rocks, that it is deemed impregnable; every accessible part on the coast being defended by strong forts, heavy cannon, and a numerous and regular garrison. The only tolerable port in the whole island is the harbour of Angra. The island is fertile, pleasant, and healthy; the very rocks, which elsewhere are dry and barren, produce here vines, though not equal to those raised in the Canaries and Madeira. The land yields large crops of wheat and other grain, pasture for cattle, and a prodigious variety of lemons, oranges, and all those fruits peculiar to hot and cold climates, which are observed to be propagated to the greatest advantage in temperate countries. Besides Angra, there are several other towns and large villages in Tercera, with a number of forts and garrisons. Lon. 27. 13. W. Lat. 38. 38. N.

Tercera, small isl. in the Atlantic, near the coast of Sierra Leone.

Tercero, r. S. A., which rises in Tucuman, and joins the Salado on the borders of Paraguay.

Terchiz, or Tershiz, t. Persia, in Chorasani; 120 WNW. Herat. Lon. 57. 12. E. Lat. 35. N. It was formerly a celebrated fortress, and supposed to be impregnable, from the extraordinary height of the walls, & the breadth and depth of the ditches which surrounded it.

Terdopio, r. Italy, which runs into the Po, 12 ESE. Lumello.

Terebinthine Vale, (anciently the Valley of Elah), a vale of Palestine, a few miles west of Jerusalem.

Ternate, isl. in the E. Indian sea, in the possession of the Dutch, and the principal, though not the largest, among those called Moluccas or Spice islands, of a circular form, and about 18 miles in circumference. In the centre is a lofty volcanic mountain, whose base extends almost to the sea every way. The productions are cocoa-nuts, bananas, yams, oranges, and other fruits; but the principal article of commerce is cloves; many birds of paradise, and other beautiful birds, are found here, and plenty of game. This island was first settled by the Spaniards, who were driven away by the Dutch, to whom the king of the island is subject. The Europeans have two forts, called Orange, and Terloeke, between which is a lake, called Sasse, 3 miles in circumference, and 60 fathoms deep, separated from the sea by a narrow dike, which the Spaniards made a fruitless attempt to cut through, to form a port. On this island are 3 mosques, and a Dutch church, but no place of worship for the Portuguese. The province or government of Ternate includes the islands of Ternate, Tidore, Motir, Machian, and Bachian, which are what are properly the Moluccas; they are the original places of growth of the finer spices. This island suffered greatly in August, 1770, by earthquakes. Lon. 127. 10. E. Lat. 0. 50. N.

It is situated between two arms of the Nera, and, therefore, anciently called Interamnium, or Interamna. It is well built, and the see of a bishop. Its greatest trade consists in oil, besides which it also reaps considerable advantage from its excellent vineyards. This was the birth-place of the emperors Tacitus and Florianus, and of Tacitus the famous historian. Between 6 and 7 Italian miles from Terni, to the NW., close by the little town of Cesi, is Mount Eolo, remarkable for its cool breezes.

Terra Australis del Espiritu Santo, isl. in S. Pacific ocean, and the most westerly as well as the largest of those called New Hebrides; 60 miles in length, and 30 in breadth. The land of it, especially the W. side, is exceedingly high and mountainous: and in many places the hills rise directly from the sea. Except the cliffs and beaches, every other part is covered with wood, or laid out in plantations. Lon. 106. 45. to 167. 32. E. Lat. 14. 40. to 15. 40. S.

Terra Firma. Under this name was formerly comprehended a vast extent of country, and, considered as a government under the authority of the crown of Spain, including several extensive provinces, and three audiences, which were fixed at Panama, Quito, and Santa Fé de Bogota; the large provinces were Terra Firma Proper, or Darien, Popayan, Quito, and New Grenada, all of which were again subdivided into several smaller provinces or jurisdictions.

Terra Firma, pr. S. America, bounded N. by the Spanish Main, E. by the river and gulf of Darien, which separates it from the province of Carthagena, S. by Popayan and the Pacific ocean, and W. by the Pacific ocean and province of Veragua. It is divided into the 3 provinces of Veragua, Panama, and Darien; which see. The whole country is an alternate mixture of valleys and hills of different heights, with abundance of rivers running towards each sea. The climate is very hot, yet the humidity is greater, in proportion, than the heat, consequently the air must be rendered unwholesome.

Terra del Fuego, "The land of fire," isl. so called by Magellan because he perceived many fires during the night, which he supposed to be the volcanoes on the mountains. It is a large isl. separated from the southern extremity of America by a narrow sea, called the Straits of Magellan. It is divided by narrow straits into 11 or more islands, and extends 300 miles from east to west, and from 100 to 200 from north to south. The aspect of the country is represented as dreary and uncomfortable, consisting of a chain of stupendous rocks, and continually covered with snow. The inhabitants go naked, and paint their bodies with the most gorgeous colours. Those on the south side are said to be uncivilized, treacherous, and barbarous; while those on the opposite side are simple, affable, and perfectly harmless. The skins of wild animals are sometimes used to cover their bodies, upon occasions of extraordinary pomp; and their tents are made of poles, disposed in a conical form, covered with skins, or the bark or leaves of trees. Terracina, t. Popedom, in the Campagna di Roma; 26 W. Sezza, 47 SE. Rome. Pop. 9,000. Bp. see. It is situated at the southern extremity of the Pontine marshes; partly on an eminence, in a picturesque situation, but rendered unhealthy by the surrounding marshes. It was anciently the capital of the Volsci, and named Anxur. The Greeks called it Trachyna, corrupted into Terracina. Being built on a rock, in the reign of Tiberius, 20,000 persons were killed by the fall of a theatre. It had once a harbour; but that is now choaked up; near Terracina are considerable fragments of the Via Appia, made from Rome to Capua. This road was paved with hard stone of various sizes, but uniformly 12 inches in thickness; and was wide enough for two carriages.

Tessin, Ticino, or Tesino, (an. Ticinus), r. Switz. and Italy, which rises from Mount St. Gothard, traverses the Swiss canton of Tessin, and flows into the Lago Maggiore. Issuing from the S. end of that lake, it forms the boundary between Austrian Italy and the Sardinian States, till it joins the Po below Pavia. It is navigable to the lake.

Tessin, or Ticino, canton, Switz., bounded N. by Uri, NE. by Grisons, SE. and S. by Austrian Italy, SW. by Sardinian Milanese, and W. by Valais. Sq. m. 1,134. Pop. in 1808, 88,703 ; by official statement in 1818, 90,200. The inhabitants are mostly Italians, and Catholics. It is composed of what were formerly called the Italian bailiwicks, which, though long subject to Switzerland, were not formed into a canton till 1815. It is divided into 8 districts, Mendrisio, Lugano, Pallemagia, Locarno, Bellinzona, Riviera, Blegno, and Levantina. Bellinzona is the capital. It is extremely mountainous, the ramifications of the Alps dividing it into more than 20 distinct valleys. It has a mild climate ; is well watered and fertile ; and no country is more remarkable for scenery at one time rich and beautiful, at another awful and sublime. The government has heretofore been unfavourable ; the inhabitants ignorant and indolent, and cultivation backward. The mountains are covered with forests of chesnuts, the fruit of which, joined to the maize of the valleys, forms the chief food of the inhabitants. Vines, mulberries, figs, and almonds, all succeed here. The only manufacture is straw hats.

Tewksbury, t. Eng., in Gloucestershire; 11 NE. Gloucester, 104 W. London. Lon. 2. 9. W. Lat. 52. 2. N. Pop. in 1821, 4,962. It is situated at the conflux of the Severn and Avon, in a beautiful and fertile vale, on the borders of Worcestershire, besides which, 2 other small rivers run through the town, and join the Severn. It is a handsome town, consisting mostly of 3 principal streets, and the houses chiefly built of brick. The church is a noble pile of building, and one of the largest in England which is not collegiate or cathedral. Tewksbury has been long celebrated for its mustard; but it is at present chiefly distinguished for its manufacture of stockings. Here are two markets weekly, Wednesday and Saturday; and it sends two members to parliament. Near this town was fought a most bloody battle between the parties of York and Lancaster, which put a final period to the power of the latter.

Texas, tract of country, N. A., claimed by Spain as a part of the Internal provinces, and included in the intendency of San Luis Potosi. It is bounded N. by Red river, E. by the state of Louisiana, S. by the gulf of Mexico, and W. by the del Norte; containing upwards of 100,000 Square miles. It was settled as early as 1660; and was estimated to contain in 1807, 7,000 inhabitants; in 1820, not more than 4,000. Its towns, San Antonio, Nacodoches, and La Bahia, have gone to decay since 1812. There are some scattering Spanish presidios in this country, yet it is for the most part a wilderness. The interior towards Red river is barren, but the part towards the gulf of Mexico resembles the southern part of Louisiana.

Texel, or Tessel, isl. Neth., about 11 miles in length, and 6 in its greatest breadth. Lon. 4. 40. E. Lat. 53. 5. N. Pop. 4,950. It is situated at the entrance of the Zuyder Zee, separated from North Holland by the narrow channel of Marsdiep. The soil is well fitted for sheep pasture, and it is noted for cheese. It has a capacious and good harbour and a fort, which commands the entrance; besides the petty town of the same name, it contains six villages: the land is fertile in pasture, and the whole well secured with dikes of prodigious strength and height. Near this island was the celebrated sea-fight, between the fleet of Holland, under admiral Tromp, and that of England, under admiral Blake, in 1653, in which Tromp was killed. In 1673, a battle was fought between the fleet of Holland and the united fleets of England and France.

Teza, t. Fez, with a castle; 50 NNE. Fez, 60 SE. Tetuan. Lon. 3. 40. W. Lat. 34. 8. N. It was once a populous city, but is now much decayed, yet is still the residence of a governor and a garrison.

Tezcuco, one of the 5 lakes in the valley of Mexico, about 14 miles long, and 8 broad. On the west side, about 3 miles distant from the lake, is the city of Mexico. The depth is not in general more than from 9 to 16 feet; and the ground is so smooth that the difference of level for a mile is only $7\frac{1}{2}$ inches, in consequence of which, when the wind blows from the east with any violence, the water withdraws towards the western bank, and sometimes leaves an extent of more than half mile dry. It has been gradually diminishing since the conquest of Mexico by the Spaniards. The water is brackish. On its surface are floating gardens belonging to the city, which are among the most curious specimens of horticulture.

Tezcuco, or Tezcoco, t. Mexico, capital of a jurisdiction, on the lake of Tezcuco; 15 ENE. Mexico. Lon. 98. 52. W. Lat. 31. 30. N. Pop. 5,000. It contains a hospital, and 2 convents, and formerly had very considerable cotton manufactories, but they have suffered by a competition with those of Queretaro. When Cortez invaded Mexico, this town was the capital of a kingdom, exceedingly rich and populous, under a nephew of Montezuma.

Besides the magnificent remains of several of the city gates, (which, according to the tradition of the Arabs, were 40 in all, and that when the place was in prosperity, it could send out of each of them 40,000 armed men,) there are the seats and upper part of an amphitheatre; the frontispiece of a beautiful Ionic temple, dedicated to Esculapius; a large oblong chamber with a great gate on each side of it, intended perhaps for a triumphal arch; and the Cubbell Ar-rasah, i. e. the Cupola of the bride, as the Arabs call a little beautiful mausoleum, built in the fashion of a dome, supported by Corinthian pillars.

Thainee, (an. Thena, or Thenæ.) t. Africa, in Tunis, on E. coast; 50 SW. El Medea, 19 SSE. Cairoan. It was built upon a low and rocky piece of ground, near 2 miles in circuit; but as the ancient materials have been employed in building of Sfax, there is scarce one piece of marble or hewn stone to be met with. This maritime city, so famous in ancient geography, is not only badly situated, but seems never to have had either port or cothon. The adjacent country too, is dry and barren. Here is a pretty large brook, called Wed el Thainee, i. e. the river of Thainee.

Thame, or Tame, t. Eng. in Oxfordshire; 13 E. Oxford, 45. NW. London. Lon. 0. 53. E. Lat. 51. 45. N. Pop. 2,328. It is situated on the river Tame, which is navigable for barges; on the borders of Buckinghamshire. Market on Tuesday.—Native, chief justice Holt.

Thames, r. Connecticut, which is formed by the Shetucket and Yantic, at Norwich, and flows S. into Long Island sound, 2 miles below New London. It is navigable through its whole course.

Thames, (an. Tamesis.) r. England, which, according to Dr. Campbell, takes its source from four rivulets, springing up in the different parts of the Cotswold hills, and joined together, form one stream near Lechlade, which there becomes navigable for barges. But the chief spring, or what is called the Thames-head, is about 3 miles S. from Cheltenham, from whence it proceeds to Cricklade, Lechlade, Oxford, Abingdon, where it is joined by the Ock, Dorchester, where it receives the Tame, Wallingford, and leaving Reading to the right, a little below receives the Kennet, and soon after the Loddon; then passes Henley, Marlow, Maidenhead, Windsor, Staines, where it receives the Coln, near Chertsey, Weybridge, where it receives the Wey, Kingston, Richmond, Brentford, where it receives the Brent, Hammersmith, Fulham, Battersea, Westminster, London, Greenwich, a little below which it receives the Lea, Woolwich, below which it receives the Roding from Essex, and opposite to Purfleet it receives the Darent; it then passes by Gravesend, Tilbury-Fort, and at the Nore joins the Medway, where it becomes sea. The tide of this river runs as far up as Richmond, about 70 miles from the sea. Large ships of war can come up to Deptford; merchant ships of 700 or 800 tons, as far as the port at London; barges as far as Lechlade. The canal navigation of the Thames, as well as the docks and other great works connected with it, are very complicated and extensive. Length 230 miles.

Thames, r. New Zealand. Captain Cook sailed up this river in a pinnace. At about 14 miles from the entrance it is as wide as the Thames, at Greenwich. The course is from S. to N., and the entrance between Cape Colville and Point Rodney.

Thebes, city, Greece, capital of Bœotia; now Thiva, which see.

Thebes, ancient city and capital of Egypt, in the Thebaid, or Upper Egypt, on both sides of the Nile, about 260 S. Cairo. Thebes is famous as "the city of an hundred gates," the theme and admiration of ancient poets and historians, the wonder of travellers.—"That venerable city," in the language of Dr. Pococke, "the date of whose destruction is older than the foundation of other cities, and the extent of whose ruins, and the immensity of whose colossal fragments still offer so many astonishing objects that one is rivetted to the spot, unable to decide whither to direct the step or fix the attention." These ruins extend about 8 miles along the Nile, from each bank to the sides of the inclosing mountains, and describe a circuit of 27 miles. The most remarkable objects on the eastern side are the temples of Carnac and Luxor, and on the western side are the Memnonium, or palace of Memnon, two colossal statues, the sepulchres of the kings, and the temple of Medinet Abu.

The glory of Thebes belongs to a period prior to the commencement of authentic history. It is recorded only in the dim lights of poetry and tradition, which might be suspected of fable, did not such mighty witnesses remain to their truth. At the time of the Persian invasion, Memphis had supplanted Thebes, and the Ptolemies afterwards removed the seat of empire to Alexandria. Strabo and Diodorus described Thebes under the name of Diospolis, and gave such magnificent descriptions of its monuments as caused the fidelity of those writers to be called in question, till the observations of modern travellers proved their accounts to have fallen short of the reality. At present its site presents only a few scattered villages, consisting of miserable cottages, built in the courts of the temples. The ancient structures, however, remain in a state of wonderful preservation. Almost the whole extent of 8 miles along the river, is covered with magnificent portals, obelisks, decorated with the most beautiful sculpture, forests of columns, and long avenues of colossal statues. The largest of these temples, and of any in Egypt, is that at Carnac, on the site of the ancient Diospolis. Diodorus describes it as 13 stadia, about $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. in circumference, which nearly agrees with the observation of Denon. It has 12 principal entrances, and the body of the temple, which is preceded by a large court, consists of a prodigious hall or portico, the roof of which is supported by 134 columns, some 26, others 34 feet in circumference; 4 beautiful obelisks then mark the entrance to the shrine, which consists of three apartments, built entirely of granite. About $1\frac{1}{4}$ m. above Carnac is the village and temple of Luxor. This temple, though not of such vast dimensions as that of Carnac, is in a superior style of architecture, and in more complete preservation. The entrance is thought to surpass every thing else that Egypt presents. In front are the two finest obelisks in the world, formed of rose coloured granite, and rising, as Denon supposes, after allowing for the portion buried in the ground, to the height of 100 feet. But the object which most attracts attention consists in the sculptures which cover the east wing of the northern front. They contain, on a great scale, a representation of a victory, gained by one of the ancient kings of Egypt over their Asiatic enemies. The number of human figures introduced amounts to 1,500; 500 on foot, and 1,000 in chariots. The Memnonium and the temple of Medinet Abu are objects of great interest both for the grandeur of their architecture, and the richness and variety of their sculptures. In the interior of the mountains which rise behind these monuments, on the west bank of the Nile, are found objects less magnificent and imposing indeed, but not less interesting—the tombs of the kings of Thebes. Several of these have been lately opened by M. Belzoni, and were found in a state of great preservation, with mummies in the sarcophagi, as well as dispersed through the chambers. The colossal statues have excited great admiration. The largest has been broken off at the waist, and the upper part laid prostrate on the back. It measures 6 feet and 10 inches over the front, and 62 feet round the shoulders. Two other colossal statues, about 50 feet high, are seated on the plain.

Theiss, Teisse, Theysse, or Tisza, (an. Tibiscus, Tibisis, and Patissus,) r. Hungary, which rises in the county of Marmaros, in the NE. of Hungary, flows above 100 miles in a western direction, then turns to the south, and after a course of about 500 miles, joins the Danube at Salankemen, below Titul. It abounds in fish, flows through a level country, has a winding course, and is navigable to within a few miles of its source. Among its tributaries are the Szamos, Bodrog, Satwa, Zagya, Koresch, Maros, Aranka, and Bega.

Theodosia, Feodosia, Caffa, or Kaffa, s-p. Russia, in Taurida, on the Black sea; 76 SE. Perekop. Lon. 33. 4. E. Lat. 45. 6. N. Theodosia formerly contained 36,000 houses within its walls, and including the suburbs, 44,000. All late accounts till within a few years have stated the number of houses at 5, or 6,000; but according to Dr. Clarke the number of families, in 1800, did not exceed 50; and Reuilly states the number of houses, in 1803, at 100. When this town was first founded, it was called Theodosia. It was afterwards called Caffa, or Kaffa; but falling with the rest of the Crimea into the power of Russia, the name was by order of the empress changed to that of Theodosia, or Feodosia. NW. of it are some high mountains; at the foot of which it stands in a very delightful and convenient situation; but the harbour, besides a difficult bar, affords small shelter in a SE. wind.

Theraud, t. Hind., capital of a district, in the NW. part of Guzerat. Lon. 71. 58. E. Lat. 24. 27. N. H. 2,700, or 3,000. It is the residence of a chief, surrounded by a wall and dry ditch; the palace and temple lofty, but the houses generally of only one story. The annual revenue of the chief, is stated at 20,000 rupees.

Theresa, r. Africa, which runs into the Atlantic, Lat. 13. S.

Theresienstadt, or Marien Theresienstadt, or Therespol, or Szabadka, royal free town, Hungary, in Bacs; 50 N. Peter Wardein, 100 S. by E. Pest. Lon. 19. 41. E. Lat. 46. 6. N. Pop. 21,753. H. 3,000. Like Debreczin it is an assemblage of villages, or rather one vast overgrown village, open, but has large barracks for lodging soldiers. All the other public buildings are a Catholic church for the Servians, a Greek church for Rascians, and a Franciscan monastery for Catholics. There is a pretty active trade in cattle, horses, wool, and hides; there are no large manufacturing establishments. The inhabitants, partly of Servian and partly of Rascian descent, depend for their support chiefly on the extensive town lands. The total extent of this territory is 340 sq. m., while the population, including the town, hardly exceeds 30,000.

Thermi, t. Natolia; 24 N. Bursa.

Thermia, (an. Cythus), isl. in the Grecian Archipelago, so called from its abounding with hot springs. Lon. 24. 32. E. Lat. 37. 20. N. Pop. about 6,000 Greeks. It is not so mountainous as some of the other islands, and the soil, when well cultivated, produces very large quantities of barley, wine, and figs. The island also affords plenty of honey, wax, partridges, a great quantity of fine silk, and as much cotton as the inhabitants require for their own use. Thermia is the see of a bishop, has its name from hot springs, and contains remarkable ruins of two ancient towns.

Thermia, t. & capital of the island of Thermia. Lon. 24. 26. E. Lat. 37. 24. N.

Thermopylae, a narrow defile or pass, Greece, leading from Thessaly into Locris and Phocis; between mount Æta and the sea; 60 N. by E. Corinth, 40 N. Thebes. It is five or six miles long, but only 50 or 60 paces, (in the narrowest part only 25 feet) wide, in the time of the Greeks, now nearly double from the retiring of the sea. The cliffs overhanging the pass, are in general, from 400 to 600 feet high. It receives its name from some hot baths near it. It is celebrated for a desperate resistance against the Persian army under Xerxes, made by 300 Spartans, under Leonidas, for 3 successive days. All the Spartans were slain, except one. The narrowest part of the defile was, not long since, occupied by a barrier and a Turkish guard. The place itself exhibits nothing agreeable or interesting, and the air is rendered unwholesome by mephitic exhalations.

Thermodon, now Termeh.

Therondels, t. France, Aveiron; 3 NE. Mur.

Therouanne, (an. Taruenna), t. France, in Straits-of-Calais, on the Lys; 4 W. Aire, 6 S. St. Omer. Pop. 430. It was anciently the capital of the Morini, and afterwards an episcopal see, with several churches and convents; but being taken in 1553, by Charles V., he demolished it.

Thessalonica, now Saloniki.

Thessaly, anciently Thesalia, Pelasgia, and Pyrrhea, now called by the Turks, Janna, pr. Eu. Turkey, in the north of Greece, bounded N. by Macedonia, E. by the Archipelago, S. by Livadia, and W. by Livadia and Albania. Pop. about 300,000. Sq. m. 3,490. A large part of it is included in the Turkish sandgiacat of Tricala. The principal towns are Larissa, Zeiton, Volo, Tricala, & Ambelakia. The chief river is the Peneus. Its mountains are famous in Grecian poetry and mythology. On the west is the range of Pin-duſ; among the other mountains are Olympus, Oſſa, & Pelion. Here are the plains of Pharsalia and the delightful vale of Tempe. Theſſaly is one of the fineſt provinces of Greece, abounding in delightful mountain ſcenery, with beautiful and fertile plains. Theſe plains, equally renowned in ancient times for paſture and tillage, continue highly fertile, producing maize, wheat, rice, vines, ſilk, cotton, and tobacco. The inhabitants in the maritime diſtricts are much more civilized than among the mountains.

Thetford, t. Eng., on the Leſſer Ouse, partly in Suffolk, but chiefly in Norfolk; 80 NE. London. Lon. 0. 45. E. Lat. 52. 25. N. Pop. 2,922. The Saxon kings made it the metropolis of the kingdom of the Eaſt Angles; but it was three times ruined by the Danes. In the 12th century, it was the ſee of a biſhop, and then a place of great note. The lent aſſizes for Norfolk are always held here. In the reign of Edward III. it had 20 churches, 5 markets, 24 ſtreets, beſides lanes, 6 hospitals, and 8 monaſteries, moſt of which are now in ruins, and of all the churches, only two remain. It has of late been much improved; it has conſiderable trade and manufactures, and returns 2 members to parliament; the market is on Saturday.—Native, Thomas Paine.

THIBET, Tibet, or Tibbet, country, in central Asia, bounded N. by Tartary, E. by China, S. by Burmah, Bengal, and Northern Hindooſtan, and W. by Cabuliſtan and Tartary. It is ſometimes conſidered as a part of Tartary, but commonly as an appendage to India, and is called by the natives Pue, or Puekachim; Pue ſignifying northern, and Koachim, ſnow. Lon. 74. to 102. E. Lat. 26. 35. N. Sq. m. about 360,000. Lassa is the chief town.

Face of the country, &c.—The diſtinguiſhing feature of this country is its great and general elevation, being the region in which riſe the great rivers of India, China, Tartary, and Siberia. In the ſouthern part are the Himmaleh mountains, always covered with ſnow, and reputed the higheſt on the globe. The greateſt part of the country is covered with ſtupendous mountains, rocky hills, or extenſive arid plains, all of the moſt ſtern and forbidding aſpect. The productions are wheat, pease, barley, &c., but in many parts theſe grains never ripen, owing to the ſeverity of the climate. The temperature and ſeaſons are remarkably uniform, both in their periodical elevation, and in their return.

Animals.—Thibet abounds much more in animal than in vegetable life. The variety and abundance of wild fowl, game, and beaſts of prey, flocks, droves, and herds, are aſtoniſhing. Some of the moſt remarkable animals are the yak, or buſhy tailed bull, the muſk deer, and a ſpecies of goat. The muſk deer are found in great abundance in the high mountains, and are monopolized by government, by whoſe permission only they are hunted. The muſk, which forms a valuable article of revenue, is a ſecretion contained in a little bag or tumour reſembling a wen, ſituated at the navel, and is found only in the male. The goat of Thibet is the moſt beautiful of the ſpecies of goats, and is the animal which yields the materials for the manufacture of Caſhmere ſhawls.

Minerals, &c.—This country is rich in mineral productions, as gold, lead, cinnabar, quickſilver, copper, iron, tincal, and rock ſalt. Thibet trades with China and Bengal.—The Thibetians are rude and ignorant; learning is but little cultivated by them, and the arts of civilized life are in a backward ſtate. They are ſubject to a glandular ſwelling in the throat, a diſeaſe common in ſimilar ſituations in Europe. Their religion is that of the Grand Lama, whoſe reſidence is at Lassa. They enjoy but a ſhadow of independence, being ſubject to China ſince 1720. The Chinese maintain reſidents at Lassa, who are inveſted with all the real power, and who keep up a conſtant communication with Pekin.

It was anciently called Thebes, and the capital of Bœotia, and in the days of its prosperity contained 40,000 inhabitants, situated between two small rivers, supposed to be the Ismenus and Dirce of the ancients; on a circular plain surrounded by steep and lofty hills. It retains in the vestiges of its gates and prodigious ramparts, many proofs of its ancient grandeur. Only that part of it is now inhabited which was originally the castle, called the Cadmæa, from Cadmus, its founder. The ancient walls may still be traced. It has 2 mosques and 4 churches; the vicinity is very fertile in vines, olives, tobacco, and cotton. The site is recognised, as well by the beauty of its plain, terminated by Helicon and Parnassus, as by the atmosphere, which is still, as in ancient times, thick and foggy, whence the ancient inhabitants of Bœotia were accounted dull and phlegmatic, and were neither famous for their wit nor valour. Epaminondas raised Thebes to its highest pitch of grandeur.

Thorda, or Thorenborg, t. Transylvania, cap. of a county, in the land of the Magyars, near the Aranjós; 17 SSE. Clausenburg. Lon. 23. 48. E. Lat. 46. 32. N. Pop. 8,000. H. 2,000. It is divided into old and new towns, & contains 2 Catholic churches, 2 Reformed, 2 Greek, 1 Lutheran, and 1 Unitarian; a Unitarian gymnasium, and a military academy. The Hungarian language is spoken here in great purity. The chief support of the town is the salt trade, it being a sort of depot for the rich salt mines in the neighbourhood. These mines were wrought by the Romans, who had a town by the name of Salinæ, the ruins of which are near Thorda.—Pop. of the county nearly 100,000. Sq. m. 1,850. It is hilly, has mines of salt and iron, and extensive forests; it produces wine, but has little corn land.

the Vistula, about 90 miles from its mouth; 80 S. Dantzic, 100 WNW. Warsaw. Lon. 23. 48. E. Lat. 53. 1. N. Pop. 8,371. H. 1,070. It consists of the old and new towns, separated from each other by a wall ditch; both surrounded by a mound and moat, and Thorn was formerly considered a place of great strength. It contains 1 Luth. ch., 3 Cath. chh., 2 convents, a Cath. gymnasium, and a military academy. It has manufactures of woollens, linens, hats, leather, gloves, and starch, and exports also grain and wood; but its commerce is less than formerly, the Vistula having become wider & more shallow, so that vessels of burden can no longer come up to the town. The best edifices are of old date. It was formerly distinguished among the Hanse towns.—Copernicus was born here in 1472.

Three Rivers, one of the 4 districts of Lower Canada, lying between the districts of Montreal and Quebec. The line of 45 deg. N. Lat. forms a part of the southern boundary; its northern limit is indefinite. Its breadth is about 50 miles.

Three Rivers, or Trois Rivières, t. Lower Canada, capital of the above district, at the entrance of the St. Maurice into the St. Lawrence; 84 WSW. Quebec, 96 NNE. Montreal. Lon. 72. 29. W. Lat. 46. 23. N. Pop. 2,500. H. 320. It derives its name from the fact, that the St. Maurice is separated by two islands, lying at its mouth, into 3 channels, so that there is an appearance of three rivers. It stands on a light sandy soil, has little to attract the notice of a stranger, the streets being narrow and unpaved, the houses mostly of wood, and meanly built. The old houses are of only 1 story, but those of more recent date are in a better style. The principal public buildings are the Ursuline convent, the Protestant and Catholic churches, the court house, jail, and barracks. Its situation, as a shipping port, is convenient, and its trade considerable. It ranks as the third town in Lower Canada, and was formerly the capital of the French government of the country.

Tiverton, p-t. Newport co. R. I.; 12 NNE. Newport, 24 SE. Providence, 54 S. Boston, W. 431. Pop. 2,875. It is on the main land, opposite to Portsmouth, on Rhode Island, with which it is connected by a stone bridge, nearly 1,000 feet long. The town lies on Narraganset and Mount Hope bays which afford convenient navigation. About twenty vessels are usually owned or employed here; and the fisheries are valuable. The Indian name was Pocasset.

Tiverton, t. Eng., in Devonshire, situated on the river Ex, where it is joined by the Lowman; 14 N. Exeter, 161 W. London. Lon. 3 40. W. Lat. 50. 55. N. Pop. 6,732. H. 1,269. It is situated on the slope of a hill, consists of 4 principal streets, the houses are built of brick, or stone, covered with slates. The principal public buildings, are the castle, church, and free grammar school, an eminent seminary. It has been long famous for its woollen manufactures. It has markets on Tuesday and Saturday, and sends 2 members to parliament.

Tiumen, t. Russia, in Tobolsk, capital of a circle, at the union of the Pischma and the Tura; 112 WSW. Tobolsk. 320 ENE. Upha. Lon. 65. 14. E. Lat. 57. N. Pop. 7,200. H. 1,100. Over the river is a bridge of 83 fathoms in length; and a little below it stands a fort built with stone, in which is a church of the same materials. Without this fortification, and towards the lower bank of the Tura, are 6 wooden churches, a convent of nuns, with a church and 500 dwelling houses. At the lower end of the town is an ostrorg. Beyond the Tumenka lies the Yamskaia sloboda, or suburb, consisting of 250 houses; and at the extremity of this suburb stands a monastery; it has likewise 3 churches, built with stone. Another suburb lies opposite to Tiumen.

Tivoli, (an. Tibur), Italy, States of the Church, capital of a district, in Campagna di Roma, on the Teverone; 15 ENE. Rome. Lon. 12. 46. E. Lat. 41. 50. N. Pop. 14,000. Bp. see. It contains a cathedral, 10 churches and 14 convents, some of them tolerable edifices, but the town is not generally well built. It is delightfully situated on an eminence sheltered on one side by Monte Castali and a circular range of the Sabine mountains, while on the other it commands an extensive prospect over the Campagna di Roma. The sides of the hill on which it stands are covered with olives and fruit trees; but the great attraction now, as in former ages, consists in the falls of the Teverone (the ancient Anio), which glides gently through the town till reaching the brink of a rock, over which it precipitates itself nearly 100 feet, in one mass, and after boiling up in its narrow channel, rushes through a chasm of the rock into a cavern below. On the summit of the steep bank stands a beautiful temple of the Corinthian order, supposed to have been dedicated to Vesta, and built in the Augustan age. Here are also remains of other temples and of several Roman villas; and in the market place are 2 images of oriental granite, representing Isis, the Egyptian deity.

Tlascala, or Tlaxcalla, t. Mexico, Puebla, capital of a district, formerly of a kingdom ; 20 N. Puebladelos Angeles, 64 E. Mexico. Lon. 98. 10. W. Lat. 19. 25. N. Pop. 3,400. It is situated on a river which runs into the Pacific ocean. When the Spaniards first arrived here, it is said to have contained 300,000 inhabitants : and Acosta affirms that it had a market place large enough to hold 30,000 buyers and sellers ; that in the shambles were seldom less than 15,000 sheep, 4,000 oxen, and 2,000 hogs. But matters were so much altered, that Gemelli, who was here in 1698, says, it had then become an ordinary village, with a parish church, in which hangs up a picture of the ship which brought Cortez to La Vera Cruz.—The district or government of Tlaxcalla, is so fertile in maize that it received its name from the produce of the soil, Tlaxcalla signifying the land of bread.

Tobago, one of the Caribbee islands, in the West Indies, belonging to Great Britain, about 30 miles in length, from SE. to NW., and about 9 in breadth. Lon. 60. 30. W. Lat. 11. 16. N.

In 1805 there were 900 whites, 700 people of colour, and 14,883 slaves. The climate of Tobago is far more temperate than could be expected in an island that is but 11 deg. 16. m. N. from the equator ; for the heat is allayed by the sea breezes. Tobago has another favourable circumstance to recommend it, by its lying out of the tract of those hurricanes that prove so fatal to the other West India islands. The surface of the island is unequal and agreeably diversified ; but no part of it is rugged or impassable, though its NW. extremity is mountainous. Its soil is of different kinds, but in general the mould is rich and black, and proper for producing, in the greatest plenty, whatever is raised in other parts of the West Indies. The abundance of springs upon the island contributes to its healthfulness, and its bays and creeks are so disposed as to be very commodious for all kinds of shipping. The value of exports, in 1810, amounted to £70,788 : imports about £200,000.

Tobolsk, or Tobolskoi, gov. Asiatic Russia, comprising the western part of Siberia, bounded N. by the Frozen ocean, E. by Tomsk, S. by Orenburg & W. by Perm & Archangel. It is divided into 9 circles, Tobolsk, Tiumen, Turinsk, Yalutorovsk, Thurgan, Ischim, Tara, Omsk, and Berezov. Sq. m. 356,000. Pop. according to Hassel, 447,000 ; Cannabich, 453,000. It included formerly most of the government of Tomsk ; and by enumeration in 1801, the population was 622,422. Of these 2,017 were Mongols, 17,236 Ostiaks, 2,636 Bukharians, 1,993 Tunguses, 2,581 Yakoutes, 3,302 Samoides, and about 22,000 Cosacs. It is watered by the Oby and its branches.

Tobolsk, city, Russia, capital of the above government, and chief city of Siberia, on the Irtisch, at the junction of the Tobol; 1,000 E. by N. Moscow, 1,172 E. Petersburg. Lon. 68. 16. E. Lat. 58. 12. N. Pop. in 1784, 16,260, H. 2,400. Abp. see. When the Russians first took possession of this country in 1587, they built here a mere Ostrog, or wooden fort, which was burnt in 1643, and the city erected in its stead. It consists of two parts upper and lower towns. The upper town has an elevated situation, built on the site of the ancient fort, and forms what is properly called the city. It contains the residence of the governor, the tribunals, public offices, and the magazine of foreign merchandize. These, with 2 chh. and a convent, are all the edifices constructed of stone; the rest are of wood. The buildings being white, and the cupolas gilded, cause them in this high situation to make a very fine appearance at a distance. Here was formerly the kremlin or citadel, built of stone, and flanked with towers, but it is now gone to ruin. The lower town is subject to inundation, it is entirely built of wood, with the exception of a convent. Tobolsk contains 1 Luth. & 13 Greek chh., and 2 convents. Connected with the lower town is a suburb inhabited by Tartars, who are a quiet and industrious race, and are free from the habits of intoxication which prevail among the Russian inhabitants. The other residents are in a great measure descendants of exiles sent here for their crimes, or for offences against the Russian government, or sometimes on the mere caprice of despotism. The largest colony ever transported hither, consisted of Swedish officers, made prisoners at the battle of Pultava, in 1709. As many of these were well educated gentlemen, no circumstance ever so much tended to civilize this remote quarter of the world.—Provisions are so cheap here, that in Gmelin's time a man could live comfortably in the middling rank for less than £2 per year. Tobolsk is a great thoroughfare for the limited trade of Siberia, and hither are brought all the furs collected as tribute.

name of Para, from a city so called. Length about 1,500 miles.

Tocat, or Tokat, city, A. Turkey, in the pachalic of Sivas, anciently a city of Pontus, called Berisa; 40 NW. Sivas, 260 E. Constantinople. Lon. 36. 30. E. Lat. 39. 35. N. Pop. 50,000. H. 3,330, as stated by Hassel; 40,000 by Malte Brun; 60,000 by Kinnier; some state it much higher; the majority are Turks. It is situated on the river Tosanlu, in the corner of a valley, and almost surrounded with mountains, which afford quarries of marble, and well supplied with water from innumerable springs. The streets are well paved, but frequently built on uneven ground. It is the residence of a eadi, a waiwode, and an aga, commanding a thousand janizaries and some spahis. The Armenians have 7 churches, the Greeks only one. It is the see of a metropolitan, dependent on the archbishop of Nicsara, or Neocæsarea, an ancient city, almost ruined, about two days' journey from Tocat. Here are some manufactures of silk and yellow Turkey leather, but the chief trade is in copper vessels, kettles, candlesticks, &c., which are sent to Constantinople, Egypt, &c. Tocat may be considered as the centre of an extensive inland trade from all parts of Asia Minor. The caravans from Diarbekir arrive in 18 days, from Sinob in 6, from Bursa in 20, from Smyrna in 27, and proportionally less on horseback or on mules.—Henry Martyn, an eminent missionary, died here Aug. 16, 1822.

Toledo, (an. Toletum), city, Spain, in New Castile, capital of the above province, on the Tagus; 32 SSW. Madrid. Lon. 4. 11. W. Lat. 39. 53. N. Pop. 20, or 25,000. It is the see of an archbishop, who is primate of Spain, and who had formerly a revenue of upwards of £100,000, but it was appropriated to the public in 1820. The city is situated on the sides of a steep hill, surrounded by lofty mountains, and the environs are rocky and unproductive. It contains the Alcazar or palace, a Gothic cathedral, 25 churches, 38 convents and monasteries, and 14 hospitals. The streets are narrow and steep and the houses crowded. Here was a university, founded in 1470, suppressed in 1807. The manufactures consist of woollens, linens, silk, &c. The Toledo sword-blades, formerly very noted, are manufactured in a large building on the Tagus. The secret of tempering them is said to have been recovered, and they fetch a high price. Toledo is a place of great antiquity, much celebrated in the history of Spain, and was successively the seat of government under the Goths, the Moors, and the kings of Castile. It is said to have contained, 2 or 3 centuries ago, 200,000.

Tombuctoo, or Timbuctoo, city, Africa, for many centuries the great emporium of the interior trade of that continent, situated to the south of Sahara, a few miles to the north of the Niger, about 1,100 in a right line E. of the mouth of the Senegal, 1,200 SE. by S. Mogadore, 1,300 SSW. Tripoli, 2,000 WSW. Cairo. Lon., as laid down on the maps, about 1. 20. E. Lat. 17. N. This city has of late excited extraordinary interest; but it has not been visited by any European merchant or traveller, and the information as yet possessed respecting it, is exceedingly vague, unsatisfactory, and in several points contradictory. Leo Africanus, in 1500, is the first who gives a description of this city, which as a merchant he had visited twice, and his account is the only one given by an intelligent eye-witness. According to him, Tombuctoo was founded in the year of the Hegira 610, (1215 A. D.) by a king called Mense Suleiman, and under his successor it extended its dominion over all the neighbouring states, and acquired that commercial prosperity, for which it has ever since been distinguished. At the time when he visited it, it contained many persons of great opulence, particularly foreign merchants. The king possessed an ample treasure, held a splendid court, and had an army consisting of 3,000 cavalry, and a numerous infantry, many of whom used poisoned arrows. The royal palace and principal mosque were built of stone, but the houses of the ordinary inhabitants were constructed in the form of bells, the walls composed of stakes or hurdles, and the roofs of interwoven reeds. The inhabitants were mild, courteous, and gay.

Mr. Park, the enterprising traveller in Africa, was compelled to stop considerably short of Tombuctoo. He learned that the kingdom of Tombuctoo lay beyond that of Mesina, that the city lay about a day's journey to the north of the Niger, while its port, Cabra, was situated at the point of junction between the 2 branches of that river, which issue out of lake Dibbie. The government was stated to be in the hands of the Moors. Some years after this, it was stated by Mr. Jackson from Mogadore, that the king of Bambarra conquered Tombuctoo, and established there a negro government. Mr. Jackson describes the city as 12 miles in circumference, situated on a plain encircled by sandy eminences, but not surrounded with walls. The houses are spacious, of quadrangular form, but have no upper rooms, and no windows, being entirely lighted by the doors, which are wide and lofty.—In 1811, Robert Adams, an illiterate American sailor, was, according to his own account, (the truth of this account is, however, doubted,) after being shipwrecked near Cape Blanco, carried as a slave to Tombuctoo, and detained there 6 months. He represented the city as covering as much ground as Lisbon; the houses built in a very scattered manner, constructed of sticks, grass, and clay; their furniture earthen jars, wooden bowls, and grass mats. He saw no fortifications, nor did he observe that there were any priests, or any houses or form of worship. It appeared to him to be completely a negro city.

A more recent account is given by captain Riley, who suffered shipwreck on the coast of Sahara, in 1815. The account was given to Riley by Sidi Hamet, an intelligent Arab merchant, by whom he was purchased and carried to Mogadore. According to him Tombuctoo is a large town, 6 times as populous as Mogadore, (which is stated by Riley to contain 36,000;) the population entirely negro; but in a distinct town, separated by walls, Musselmans reside. The city is surrounded with a strong wall formed of stone mixed with clay, entered by 4 gates, which are shut during the night. The palace is extensive, lofty, and built of stone and clay. A few of the houses are built of stone, but the most of them of reeds. A small river runs close to the town, and at the distance of an hour's ride of a camel is the great river, Zolibib, that is, the Niger.—An account still later was collected by captain Lyon during his residence in Fezzan. From the description which he received from the merchants, the town is not so large as has been supposed; some represented it as not more extensive than Mourzouk: being walled; the houses very low; the streets, except two small ones, very irregular. Cabra, its port, was described rather as a collection of store-houses than a town. The trade consists of gold, cotton cloths, leather, and arms manufactured in Tombuctoo and the neighbouring villages.—Hadjee Talub, a Moor, who visited it several times, estimated the population at 60,000, and Hadjee Benata, another Moor, represents it as three times as large as Alexandria. The journey from Tripoli to Tombuctoo is performed in about 80 days; the longest time passed without finding water is 6 days.

of the same name, on the Tom; 161 NNE. Kolivan, 540 E. Tobolsk. Lon. 85. 21. E. Lat. 56. 30. N. Pop. 12,000. H. 2,474. It is situated on very uneven ground, and nothing can be more irregularly constructed than the old part of the town. It contains 5 chh. and 2 convents. The fortress is almost entirely in ruins. This town is extremely well situated for commerce, and the inhabitants carry on a considerable trade. It lies in the road from Eniseisk, and all the towns in the eastern and northern parts of Siberia, and on the great line of rivers that connect Tobolsk with the Chinese frontier; so that all Caravans going to and from China pass every year through this town, besides a caravan or two going from the country of the Calmucks. It is also the centre of the trade in whiskey, which is brought from the distilleries on the Tobol and Iset, and thence distributed to the countries eastward. Tomsk is represented as much behind Tobolsk and Irkutsk in civilization, and the inhabitants are excessively addicted to intoxication.

It was the nursery of many learned men, and called Dar Al Ilm, that is, the Palace of the Sciences, on account of its academy. It was a place so charming that it became a saying, "that God never made a more delicious dwelling than at Toncat." Jenghis Khan held a general diet here in 1224, which was so numerous, that its plain, though 20 miles in length, was scarce able to contain the great mass of people who were assembled on the occasion.

Tong-chang-fou, see Tong-tchang.

Tonga, erroneously written Tongataboo; taboo in the Tonga language meaning sacred, being an epithet added; the principal of the Friendly islands, sometimes called the Tonga Islands, in the S. Pacific ocean, first discovered by Tasman, who called it Amsterdam; seen by captain Cook, in 1773, and visited by him again in 1777. It is about 60 miles in circuit, somewhat oblong. The south shore is straight, and consists of coral rocks, 8 or 10 feet high, terminating perpendicularly, except in some places, where it is interrupted by small sandy beaches. The general appearance of the country is of great fertility. At a distance the surface seems entirely clothed with trees of various sizes; some of which are very large. But above the rest the tall cocoa-palms always raise their tufted heads, and are a very considerable ornament to any country that produces them.

The basis of the island is a coral rock, which is the only sort that presents itself on the shore. Of cultivated fruits the principal are plantains, of which they have 15 different sorts or varieties, bread fruit, 2 sorts of fruit found at Otaheite, & known there under the name of jambo and eevee, the latter a kind of plumb; and a vast number of shaddocks, which however are found as often in a natural state as planted. The roots are yams, of which are two sorts, one black, and so large that it often weighs 20 or 30 pounds; the other white and long, seldom weighing a pound; a large root, called kappe; one not unlike our white potatoes, called maw-haha; the taro, or coocos of other places; & another named jeejee. The only quadrupeds, besides hogs, are a few rats, and some dogs. The natives are in a state of half civilization, & practice many of the domestic virtues. Lon. 175. 12. W. Lat. 21. 9. S.

Tongusy Tartars, Tonguls, or Tunguses. These are the most ancient inhabitants of Siberia. They differ in language, manners, and dress, & even in person and stature, from all the other tribes. They have no houses where they abide any time, but range through the woods and along rivers at pleasure ; wherever they come, they erect a temporary hut of birch boughs & bark ; they are very civil, and love tobacco & brandy. Their whole wealth consists in their reindeer. The men are tall, stout, brave, & honest. Their complexion is swarthy, their faces not so flat as the Calmucs, and their countenances are more open. They are altogether unacquainted with letters ; and in their religion worship the sun and moon. See Tunguses.

Tonquin, country, Asia, bounded N. and E. by China, S. by a part of the E. Indian sea, called the Bay of Tonquin, and Cochin-china, and W. by Laos ; about 350 miles in length, and 220 in its greatest breadth. The climate is reckoned mild and temperate ; they have only two winds, which commonly prevail, the north and the south ; the former blows from June or July to January, and the latter from January to July. The rainy season begins about April, and continues till August, and is the most unhealthy part of the year. The country lying low and flat, is frequently overflowed by violent rains, so as to do great injury to the harvest ; and on the other hand, if the rains be not in sufficient quantity to nourish the rice, a famine is the consequence. Towards China, Tonquin is defended by an impenetrable ridge of mountains, which are covered with vast forests of trees, and filled with elephants, deer, tigers, and other wild creatures ; whilst the rest of the country is beautifully variegated with fertile hills and valleys, and intersected with a great number of rivers, which are tributary to the great one called Saigong, or Songkoi, which flows through the country, and on which all the principal towns are situated.

Rice is almost the only grain cultivated. Other productions are potatoes, and yams ; a variety of fruits, as oranges, said to be the best in the world ; mangoes, lemons, cocoa-nuts, and ananas ; sugar cane, indigo, areca, betel nut, the tea plant, &c. Some of the principal articles of commerce are silk and lacquered ware. The Tonquinese are ruder and more vigorous than the Chinese. They have a flat oval face, black, long, and thick hair, and skin less brown than other Indians. Their language is Chinese, with some variations. The chief town is Cachao on the Saigong, 80 miles from the sea ; 20 miles lower is Hean, a considerable town ; and 40 miles below Hean is Domea, where the English and Dutch merchants usually stop, and are rowed to Cachao in boats.

It is situated in a fertile valley, surrounded by a chain of hills, covered with vineyards. Before the revolution it was the principal town of a government, and the see of a bishop.

Toulon, (an. Telo-Martius), s-p. France, Var, capital of a district, on a bay of the Mediterranean ; 30 SE. Marseilles, 220 S. Lyons. Lon. 5. 56. E. Lat. 43. 7. N. Pop. 27,000 ; exclusive of the arsenal & galley slaves, 22,000. H. 2,400. It is built at the foot of a ridge of lofty, and in general arid mountains, which shelter it from the north. When viewed from the sea it presents nothing remarkable. It is of an oval form, surrounded with ramparts, ditches, & bastions, & defended by a fine citadel and a number of forts and batteries. It consists of 2 parts, the old and new towns ; the former ill built, but the latter in a better style, containing the principal public structures, and several straight streets. The chief public buildings in Toulon are the Hotel de Ville, the Hotel de l'Intendance, 8 churches, and 3 hospitals. The environs yield vines, figs, and other products of a warm climate.

Toulon has long been one of the chief stations of the French navy, being on the Mediterranean, what Brest is on the Atlantic. It has 2 ports, the old and new. The old or commercial port is a basin, commodious but not large. The new or military port is one of the finest in Europe, and is said to be capable of containing 200 sail of the line. The arsenal, situated along the side of the new port, is a very large edifice, well filled with arms and naval stores. Here are docks for ship-building, store houses for timber, manufactures for canvas, cordage, anchors, &c.—The trade of Toulon is not extensive, being limited to the products of the vicinity, such as wine, oil, silk, and fruit.—Toulon was occupied by the British troops in 1793, but being besieged by the French troops under Bonaparte, the British abandoned it Dec. 19th, after burning and carrying off about half of the squadron contained in the port.

Toulouse, (an. Tolosa), city, France, capital of Upper-Garonne, formerly capital of Upper Languedoc, on the Garonne, near the junction of the canal of Languedoc ; 34 posts SE. Bourdeaux, 85½ S. by W. Paris. Lon. 1. 27. E. Lat. 43. 36. N. Pop. 50,171. H. 8,800. Abp. see. The buildings are almost all of brick ; even the walls of the city are of that material, & enclose a space said to be larger than any other city in France, after Paris, but there is much vacant ground. Some of the streets are tolerably broad, others are winding and irregular. The squares are very small ; the chief embellishments are the public promenades, the quays, & the fine bridge over the Garonne, 810 ft. long. It contains a cathedral, 40 Catholic churches, 1 Reformed church, 2 large hospitals, a capitol, a mint, an exchange, a theatre, a royal college, a provincial university or academy, with four faculties, a botanic garden, an observatory, a museum, and a public library.

The situation of Toulouse, at the junction of the canal with the Garonne, is advantageous ; the river here is navigable, and as wide as the Seine at Paris. But this part of France is more backward than the northern departments ; and the commerce of the town is less than its situation would warrant. The manufactures are on a small scale, consisting of silks, woollens, leather, linen, pottery, copper, also a cannon foundry. The environs produce maize, wheat, vines, and a variety of fruits.—Toulouse is an ancient town, and in the 6th century was the capital of the Goths.—Natives, Cujas, Pibrac, Caseneuve, Maynard, Duranti, Gui Dufaure, & Campistron.

Tournay, or Doornick, (an. Turnacum & Civitas Nerviorum,) city, Neth., Hainaut, on the Scheldt; 3 posts E. Lille, 31 N. Paris. Lon. 3. 23. E. Lat. 50. 36. N. Pop. 21,303. Bp. see. It is the capital of a district, and has a citadel, a cathedral, 12 parish chh. 17 convents, 5 hospitals. It formerly had a university, now converted into a lyceum. On the side of the Scheldt is a broad handsome quay, the only embellishment of the town, which is in general ill built and gloomy. It has manufactures of carpets, stockings, caps, with a variety of other woollen and cotton stuffs. It was formerly strongly fortified, and had one of the finest citadels in Europe, which was levelled by the French in the middle of the 18th century. It is considered as the most ancient town of Belgic Gaul, being founded 600 years before CHRIST, and was anciently the capital of the Nervii. This city has often been taken and laid waste in the different wars between the French, English, and Flemings.

Tours, (an. Cesarodunum, & Turones,) city, France, capital of Indre-and-Loire, on the Loire; 65 E. Angers, 140 SSW. Paris. Lon. 0. 41. E. Lat. 47. 24. N. Pop. 21,196. H. 4,500. Abp. see. It is situated in a delightful plain, in one of the finest parts of France, the surrounding country being remarkably beautiful. It contains a cathedral, remarkable for its lofty spires, its clock, and library; 14 chh., 3 hospitals, a botanic garden, and a museum. The space included within the walls is of large extent, but the houses are generally low, and the most of the streets are narrow and gloomy. But the Rue Neuve, or Rue Royale, is a street of great elegance, the houses in it being built of stone on a uniform plan. It is in a line with the bridge over the Loire, a celebrated structure 1,400 feet long, and 45 wide, consisting of 14 arches. The approach to the town in a line with this street, either from the north or south, is remarkably fine, the avenues being bordered with rows of trees. The principal manufacture is that of silk, which formerly employed in the town and neighbourhood 20,000 people; but at present not more than one third of that number. The trade is not great. Tours was formerly more populous than at present. It is much resorted to by foreigners, particularly the English. Before the revolution it was the capital of Touraine. In 732, the Saracens were defeated by Charles Martel, near this town, with the loss of 10,000 men.

TRANSYLVANIA, called by the Hungarians Erdely, by the Germans, Siebenbergen, pr. Austrian empire, with the title of grand principality, bounded N. by Hungary, E. by Moldavia, S. by Walachia, and W. by Hungary. It is, like Hungary, divided into civil and military. Pop. of both, according to Leichtenstern, 1,797,000. Sq. m. 22,376. Pop. according to Blumenbach, 1,648,284. Sq. m. 23,716. Pop. exclusive of the military districts, according to Marienburg, 1,500,000: Magyars and Szeklers 364,658; Saxons 413,528; Walachians 839,560; Gipsies 71,734; Jews 1,849; Armenians 1,255; Greeks 751; Bulgarians 125. Of the different religions, Greek church, 916,460; Catholics 340,000; Calvinists 190,000; Lutherans 158,000; Unitarians 45,000; Jews 1,849. Pop. of the military districts 144,657; see Hungary.

Divisions. Civil Transylvania is divided into 3 large districts, or provinces, named from their original settlers.

Provinces.	Chief towns.
Land of the Hungarians	Clausenburg.
Land of the Saxons	Hermanstadt.
Land of the Szeklers	Maros-Vasarhely

The other principal towns are Cronstadt, Vasarhely, Udvarhely, and Schœsburg.

Government, &c. Transylvania, like Hungary, has a mixed constitution. Of its varied population, the descendants of the Hungarians, Szeklers, and Germans, are alone admitted to sit at the national diet. Of the religious denominations the Catholics, Protestants, and Unitarians, are the sects that possess political privileges; the others are only tolerated. The executive power is vested in a governor and 12 counsellors. The revenue is about £500,000.

Educational, &c. Education has made but little progress; there are seminaries at Hermanstadt and Clausenburg; in the principality there are 8 large or central schools, and 7 gymnasia, or grammar schools. The prevailing languages are German, Walachian, and Hungarian. The Saxons are the most improved part of the population. The Szekles are a rude people, inhabiting the mountainous districts, and resemble the Scotch Highlanders. The Walachians live in filth and poverty, and are employed as shepherds and common labourers. The gipsies are partly vagrants, and partly employed in tillage and agriculture.

Face of the country, &c. Transylvania is surrounded on the E., S. and partly on the N. by the Carpathian mountains, from which lateral chains branch off and cross the country in every direction. It, of course, consists chiefly of alternate mountains and valleys, with few extensive plains. The principal rivers are the Maros, Samos, and Aluta. The lakes are deep. The soil is generally fertile, but badly cultivated; the climate cold for the latitude, but healthy.

Productions. The productions are wheat, oats, barley, potatoes; maize and vines are in favourable situations; orchards are not neglected; hay and all artificial grasses are unknown, and cattle subsist upon natural herbage; cattle and sheep are numerous; there are extensive forests. The mineral productions are various. There are about 112 salt works, producing annually from 30, to 40,000 tons; iron mines yielding 3,000 or 4,000 tons of iron; mines of lead, copper, silver, and gold; quarries of marble, jasper, porphyry, slate, lime stone, coal, sulphur, and putroleum, precious stones, as topazes, chrysolites, opals, garnets, &c.; mineral springs in abundance.

Name. Transylvania was known to the Romans by the name of Dacia Consularis Mediterranea. Its present name is derived from the Hungarians, who called the woody country to the east of the Theiss, Silagy, or Sylvania, and the territory to the east of these woods, Terra Ultra Sylvas, Partes Tranvylvanæ, or Transylvanenses. Erdely, the Hungarian name, has the same signification.

Erivan. Lon. 39. 28. E. Lat. 41. 3. N. Pop. very differently stated, by Malte-Brun at 20, or 30,000 ; by some as low as 15,000 ; by others as high as 100,000. It is situated on a slope, rising gradually from the sea ; the houses mostly built of stone and lime, and of mean appearance. It contains 18 large mosques, 8 khans, 5 baths, and 10 small Greek churches, and is the residence of a pacha and a Greek metropolitan. The trade is very considerable ; the exports are silk and cotton stuffs, copper, wax, skins, wine, and fruits ; imports, sugar, coffee, woollen cloths, corn, salt, & iron. The present walls are built of the ruins of the ancient edifices, as appears by old pieces of marble set in several parts, and whose inscriptions are not legible, because they are too high. The castle, which is pretty large, but very much neglected, is situated upon a flat rock, and its ditches are cut in the rock. The port of Trebisond, called Platana, is to the east of the town.

Trent, city, Tyrol, in Latin Tridentum, by the Italians Trento, and by the Germans Trient, cap. of a circle, formerly capital of a princely bishopric of the same name ; 55 N. Mantua, 65 NW. Venice. Lon. 11. 4. E. Lat. 46. 6. N. Pop. 9,603. H. 700. Bp. see. It is situated on the Adige, in a small but delightful valley among the Alps, but its climate is subject to great extremes, being intensely cold in winter and hot in summer. It is surrounded with walls, and contains a cathedral, 2 other churches, a hospital, a gymnasium, and a lyceum, or central school. The streets are tolerably wide and well paved ; the houses generally old. The inhabitants are employed partly in the manufacture of silk, and partly in the culture of vines and tobacco. Trent is remarkable for a famous council or assemblage of Catholic prelates from all parts of Europe, commenced in 1545, after the reformation had acquired a considerable degree of consistency. The council terminated Dec. 4, 1563, having continued, with more or less interruption, during 18 years.

West Canada creek flows on the east side of this township, and has remarkable falls about 2 miles east of the village. The falls consist of a succession of cascades, and rapids, combined with the view of towering walls and overhanging mountains. The scenery comprises a combination of views continually varying, and extending the space of 3 miles ; and to view these scenes the spectator must travel this distance along the channel under mountainous walls, in many places more than 100 feet below the surface of the earth. One cataract is a perpendicular pitch of between 30 and 40 feet ; on each side mountainous walls rise 150 feet, on the summit of which are tall hemlocks and other trees. The scenery is remarkable for its beauty and grandeur, and the interest is greatly increased by a variety of petrifications which are found imbedded in limestone. Among these petrifications are sea shells, worms, leeches, snakes, eels, other kinds of fish, &c.

Trenton, the metropolis of N. J., in Hunterdon co., on E. bank of the Delaware, opposite to the falls; 10 SW. Princeton, 26 SW. New Brunswick, 30 NE. Philadelphia, 60 SW. New York, W. 167. Lon. 75. 48. W. Lat. 40. 13. N. Pop. in 1810, 3,003; in 1820, 3,942. It is a handsome and flourishing town, pleasantly situated, and incorporated with city privileges. It contains a handsome state house, a state prison, a market house, a court house, 2 banks, an academy, 2 large cotton manufactories, and 4 houses of public worship, 1 for Episcopalians, 1 for Presbyterians, 1 for Methodists, and 1 for Friends; and between the city and Lambertton, which joins it on the south, there are 2 other houses of worship, 1 for Roman Catholics, and 1 for Baptists. The river is navigable as far as this place for sloops; but above the falls it is not navigable, except for boats which carry from 500 to 1,000 bushels of wheat. At the foot of the falls there is an elegant covered bridge across the river.

Trieste, government, Austrian empire, comprising the south part of Illyria ; bounded N. by Laybach, E. by Croatia, S. by the Adriatic, & W. by Venice. Pop. 531,066. Sq. m. 5,012. It is divided into 4 circles, Trieste, Goritz, Carlsbad, and Fiume. The country is hilly & rugged, the soil of difficult cultivation, except in some very fertile valleys. The majority of the inhabitants are Slavonians ; but there are many Italians, Germans, and Jews.—The circle of Trieste is divided into 4 districts, Trieste, Duins, Capo d'Istria, and Rovigno. P. 175,935. Sq. m. 1,442.

Trieste, (an. Tergeste,) s-p. Austria, in Illyria, capital of the above government and circle, near the north extremity of the Adriatic, on a bay, called the Gulf of Trieste ; 69 ENE. Venice, 210 SSW. Vienna. Lon. 12. 58. E. Lat.

45. 43. N. Pop. in 1816, 36,000 ; in 1820, about 40,000. Bp. see. It is divided into old & new town ; the former stands on a hill, with a castle on the top ; the latter, called also Theresienstadt, is on level ground, intersected by a canal, and built with neatness & regularity. It contains a cathedral, 2 parish chh., 2 Greek chh., 1 Luth., 1 Ref., a synagogue, a large hospital, a lazaretto, a theatre, a gymnasium, and society of arts and sciences. It has good streets, and a number of commodious buildings, but few that are large or striking, except the cathedral and theatre.

Trieste is the most important seaport in the Austrian dominions, and almost the only one for the great extent of country extending from Tyrol to Transylvania. Among the exports are the produce of the mines of Idria, and even of Hungary ; linens, woollens, tobacco, & wine, from different parts of the Austrian dominions ; also printed cottons from Switzerland. The imports are cotton, wool, hides, raisins, silks, rice, oil from the Levant ; wheat, chiefly from Odessa ; sugar, coffee, and other tropical products. The number of vessels entered here, in 1819, was 2,186 ; cleared 2,132. Each of the commercial nations of Europe has a consul here. Ship-building is carried on here to considerable extent. At some distance are salt works ; and coal is obtained within a few miles. The environs are stony, and the land unfit for the culture of corn. The fisheries along the coast are abundant. Within a few years the trade and population have greatly increased.

Trinidad, t. New Grenada; 20 NW. Santa Fe.

Trinidad, isl. near the coast of S. A., separated from Cumana by the gulf of Paria, which is about 75 miles broad. It is of an irregular square form, 79 miles by 56. It belongs to Great Britain. Lon. 60. 6. to 61. 36. W. Lat. 9. 48. to 10. 42. N. It is the largest, most fertile, and most beautiful of all the Leeward islands, and was compared by Columbus, its discoverer, to a terrestrial paradise. It is full of forest trees of exquisite kinds of wood, such as cedars, walnuts, guayacanes, and many others. It is happily situated out of the parallel of hurricanes, which have never as yet shifted so far to the south.—The mornings and evenings in the island are delightful, and the nights invariably cool and refreshing, although the heat is great during the day. The climate is said to be as healthy as any part of the West Indies, & there are instances of persons arriving at extreme old age. Trinidad is capable of producing every article for the West India market, equal to any other of the Windward islands. Here are several sorts of animals, plenty of wild hogs, fish, fowl, and fruit. It also produces maize, cassava, and other roots, and in general all that is commonly found in America. The island of Tobago is separated from Trinidad by a channel, called Trinidad Channel. The chief town is Port of Spain. Pop. in 1789, 18,918; in 1805, 25,245: 2,261 whites, 3,275 people of colour; 19,709 slaves. Pop. in 1809, 31,000; slaves 21,000.

Trinidad, or Trinadada, s-p. Cuba, situated in a bay on S. coast of the Havannah. Lon. 80. 18. W. Lat. 21. 56. N. Pop. about 6,000. It has considerable trade in sugar and tobacco. Great damage was done in this town, on the 14th of Oct. 1812, by a hurricane. 500 houses were thrown down, or reduced to a tottering condition.

Trinidad, (La Santissima,) or Sonsonate, s-p. Guatemala, capital of a province of the same name; 10 ESE. Guatemala. Lon. 91. 6. W. Lat. 14. 3. N. Pop. 450 Spanish families, besides Indians and people of colour. It contains a monastery, and 5 churches. It is the place of export for all the merchandize of Mexico and Peru, is 3 leagues from the bay, and for this reason is considered the most desirable entrepot to these two kingdoms, although it is without defence. Though the coast is too low for the shelter of vessels, yet the anchorage is very good.

Trinidad, (La,) t. Guatemala, in Veragua, on a river which runs into the gulf of Mexico; 18 SE. La Concepcion, 40 N. St. Jago.

Trinity, or Trinidado, r. Mexico, in Texas, which flows into Galveston bay. Lat. 29. 30. N. It is 350 in length, and is navigable for large boats.

Trinity, or La Trinité, s-p. Martinico. Lon. 61. 8. W. Lat. 14. 53. N. Pop. 4, or 5,000. The harbour is formed on SE. side by the point Caravelle, which is 2 leagues in length; and on the other side by a very high hill, about 350 or 400 paces in length, which only joins to the main land by an isthmus not above 200 feet broad. The E. side, opposite to the bottom of this bay, is stopped up by a chain of rocks, which appear level with the water when the ebb-tide is spent. The town is a very thriving place, being the residence of several merchants, as well as of the lieutenant governor of the Cables-terre; and much frequented by shipping.

Trinity Inlet, bay of the N. Pacific ocean, on W. coast of N. America; 30 S. Queen Charlotte's sound.

Trinity Harbour, cove on NW. end of Trinity bay, on E. coast of Newfoundland. Lon. 53. 10. W. Lat. 48. N.

Trinity Island, isl. in the N. Pacific ocean. Capt. Vancouver says it appeared to be divided into two islands. The E. point of the most easternmost is, according to his observation, situated Lon. 206. 47. E. Lat. 56. 33. N.

Trinkamaly, or Trincomalee, s-p. Ceylon, on NE. Coast; 70 NE. Candy. Lon. 81. 23. E. Lat. 8. 31. N. It is of greater extent than Colombo, but contains fewer houses and much less population. The harbour is one of the best and safest in the island, and from its convenient situation of great consequence to a maritime power; for when the violent monsoons or stormy weather sets in, all vessels on the coast of Coromandel are obliged to put to sea. In two days ships can reach this harbour from Madras, enter it with ease, and remain in perfect security. The fort is very strong, and commands the principal bays, particularly the entrance to the harbour. The surrounding country is barren.

Tripoli, the most easterly of the Barbary States, Africa, bounded N. by the Mediterranean, E. by Barca, S. by Fezzan and the desert, and W. by Tunis. It consists chiefly of a line of coast, extending about 800 miles in length, from Cape Razatin, in Lon. 11. 38. E. to Port Bomba, in Lon. 32. 30. E. Sq. m. including Barca, according to Gatterer 187,300; according to Graberg 206,000. Pop. uncertain; estimated by Graberg at 1,000,000; by some at 2,300,000. The basis of the population consists of a mixed race of Moors, Arabs, & Turks. Jews, renegadoes, & negroes are numerous. The Moors chiefly inhabit the towns; the Arabs mostly employ themselves in pasturage. In the mountains of Garian there is a race of Arabs, who, according to a custom there prevalent from remote antiquity, live in caves under ground. A populous mountain might be passed over by the traveller without suspecting that it contained a single inhabitant. Some remains are still found in Tripoli of the extraordinary race, called by the ancients Psylli.

The habitable part of Tripoli is confined chiefly to the coast, which for a few miles inland, is of exuberant fertility; but beyond this limit the productive qualities of the soil disappear, and the interior is occupied either with deserts of sand, or by the mountainous districts of Garian and Mesulata. The productions are various. Grain is abundant; fruits, as almonds, figs, apples, pears, plums, peaches, nectarines, grapes, melons; dates are the staple production of the interior; horses, mules, cattle, sheep, poultry are numerous; the lotus, cassob, and mulberry flourish.—The bashaw exercises despotic authority. He is nominally subject to the Porte, but the authority of that power is little regarded. The principal officers of state are the bey or generalissimo; the aga, who commands the Turkish troops; the kaya, or grand judge; the kadi, or religious judge; the kaids, or governors of provinces, and the first and vice admiral. The naval force for a power celebrated for its piracies, is exceedingly small; the armed vessels not being supposed to exceed 6, mounting from 6 to 16 guns. There is no regular army; not more than 5, or 6,000 men are often called out; but on great emergencies 15,000 have been assembled.

Tripoli, (an. Œa, Tarabilis, Trebilas, & Tripolis,) city, Africa, capital of the above state, on the Mediterranean; 300 SE. Tunis. Lon. 13. 18. E. Lat. 32. 54. N. Pop. stated from 20, to 25,000. It is built in a low situation, on a neck of land extending a short distance into the sea. It is of great extent, but a large portion of the space included within the walls is unoccupied. The caravansaries, mosques, houses of foreign consuls, and of the higher ranks of the natives, are mostly built of stone, and regularly whitewashed twice a year. The lower ranks construct their houses of earth, small stones & mortar; they never exceed 1 story, & have flat roofs, which serve as a promenade. The better sort of houses are of 2 stories, though not equal to those of the rich citizens of Algiers and Tunis. With the exception of those belonging to the foreign consuls, they have no windows to the street. Bazars occupy a considerable portion of the city, and are kept in excellent order; there is one very elegant mosque; 2 public baths, spacious and convenient caravansaries. The chief monument of antiquity is a superb triumphal arch of fine marble, erected in the reign of Pius Antoninus. The city is kept clean and tranquil by a well regulated police.

The harbour is formed by a reef of rocks, and though not very spacious, is perfectly safe, and will admit small frigates not drawing more than 18 feet. The castle is an irregular square pile. The town is surrounded by a wall, flanked with 6 bastions; there are 2 gates; the batteries are mounted with about 50 pieces of cannon. The trade is chiefly confined to Malta, Tunis, and the Levant. The city has a considerable portion of the caravan trade with the interior of Africa; and the exports consist of the productions of the country and articles from the interior.

Tripoli, or Tarabolus, (an. Tripolis.) city & s-p. Syria, capital of a pachalic of the same name; 75 NNW. Damascus, 132 S. Alexandretta. Lon. 35. 44. E. Lat. 34. 26. N. Pop. estimated in 1819, at 16,000. It is situated at the foot of the branches of Mount Lebanon, and along the edge of a small triangular plain, which extends between them and the sea, and terminates in a flat promontory, on which is situated the place of anchorage. Here is a small town, called La Marina, at which vessels unlade their cargoes, and which forms the port of Tripoli. There is properly no harbour, but a mere road, defended against the action of the sea by lines of small islands, or rather shoals, called the Rabbit and Pigeon islands. The anchorage is neither very safe or convenient, the bottom being rocky with large loose stones, which rub against the cables, and the S. & SE. winds are sometimes dangerous. The town is about $\frac{3}{4}$ mile long, and 300 yards broad, and is traversed by the small rapid river Kadisha. The only fortification consists of an old citadel, a Saracen building, now useless. The town has no other defence, except being enclosed by the walls of its gardens. The plain is entirely covered with trees, chiefly mulberry, planted in regular order, and serving for the production of silk, which is the staple of Tripoli. Other exports are soap, and a few sponges.—The pachalic of Tripoli comprises a great part of ancient Phœnicia, and consists of the declivity of Lebanon, with the plain interposed between it and the Mediterranean. It is in general well watered, and covered with rich verdure, exhibiting extensive groves of mulberry, orange, lemon, and other fruit trees. The mountainous districts are inhabited by the Maronites and Ansarians. The other principal town besides Tripoli, is Latakia.

Tripolis, now Tireboli.

Tripolizza, or Tripolitza, t. Morea; 18 W. Napoli di Romania; 20 SSW. Argo, 30 NNW. Misitra. Lon. 22. 18. E. Lat. 37. 25. N. Pop. 12,000. It is situated at the foot of Mount Menalus, and is said to have been built of the remain of the ancient towns of Megalopolis, Tegea, Mantinæa, and Pallantium, though not occupying the site of either. The situation is bleak and uneven, the streets dirty, the houses generally mean, built of large unburnt bricks. It contains 4 mosques, 6 Greek churches, and a bazar. It is the residence of a pacha, but its trade is not considerable.

Troad, or Plain of Troy, a tract in the NW. part of Asia Minor, to which this name has been applied by modern Europeans, and which included the ancient city of Troy. It now contains no great cities, no grand features of nature, nor even any ancient monuments of extraordinary magnitude. The peculiar interest excited by it depends on its being the scene of events celebrated in the immortal verse of Homer. The subject, however, is enveloped in mystery, and it is impossible to identify, with certainty, the various objects mentioned by the poet. The most learned travellers and inquirers, Chandler, Wood, Chevalier, Bryant, Gell, Clarke, Hobhouse, Carlyle, &c., differ widely in their conclusions. Bryant denies not only that any spot can be identified as Troy, but that there was ever such a place as Troy, or such an event as the Trojan war. Other writers have endeavoured to place Troy in a position farther to the south, and on the shore of the Ægean sea. But the general opinion seems now fixed upon that part of the coast of Asia Minor, which lies immediately without the narrow sea, anciently called Hellespont, and opposite to the island of Tenedos. Every trace of ancient Troy being confessedly obliterated, its site can only be guessed by the relative position of the natural objects alluded to by Homer. Here is a plain of considerable extent, watered by several streams, behind which rises a chain of mountains, called by the Turks Kazdaghi, but which correspond to the Gargarus and Ida of Homer. Of the streams the most considerable is the Mender, supposed to be the ancient Scamander. A rivulet which flows into the Mender on the east side, called Callifat Osmack, is thought to be the ancient Simois. The Thymbrek, a larger river, which flows much farther eastward, and joins the Mender at its mouth, is supposed to be the ancient Thymbrius, though some take this to be the Simois. Various ruins are found in different parts of the plain, as remains of a citadel, of temples, tumuli, fragments of pottery, terra cotta, medals, &c. See Troy.

Troitzkoi, Sergiev, Troitz, or Troitskoe Monastr, t. Russia, in Moscow; 32 SE. Moscow. Pop. 4,000. It is chiefly known for its Greek monastery, called the Monastery of the Holy Trinity, the richest in Russia, usually containing above 1,000 monks. It is strongly fortified, according to the ancient mode of defence, being surrounded with high brick walls, strengthened with battlements and towers. The parapet is roofed with wood, and the walls and towers are provided with holes for muskets and cannon; the whole is surrounded by a deep ditch. Besides the convent or habitation for the monks, the walls inclose an imperial palace, and nine churches, constructed by different sovereigns. The convent is a large range of building encircling a court. The habit of the monks is black, with a veil of the same colour; they eat no meat, and the discipline of the order is very strict.

Trosachs, rugged and stupendous mountains, Scot., in west part of Perthshire, bordering on Loch Catherine; 20 WSW. Crieff. They have been much visited since they have been made the scene of the adventures of the Lady of the Lake. On entering the Trosachs the mind is impressed with wildness and rude grandeur. It seems as if the whole mountain had been torn in pieces, and frittered down by a convulsion of the earth, and the huge fragments of rocks, woods, and hills, scattered in confusion into the east end of the sides of Loch Catherine. The access to the lake is through a narrow pass of half a mile in length. The rocks are of stupendous height, and seem ready to close above the traveller's head, and to fall down & bury him in their ruins.

Troy, city & cap. Rensselaer co. N. Y., on E. bank of the Hudson; 3 S. Lansingburgh, 6 N. Albany, 166 N. New York, W. 362. Pop. in 1810, 3,895; in 1820, 5,264. It is finely situated, & regularly laid out, and is a well built and flourishing town. It contains a court house, a jail, a market house, 2 banks, a public library of 640 volumes, a Lancasterian school, and five houses of public worship, 1 for Presbyterians, 1 for Episcopalians, 1 for Baptists, 1 for Methodists, and 1 for Friends. Troy is favourably situated for a great manufacturing town. In point of wealth and trade it ranks as the third town in New York. The Hudson is navigable for sloops to this place. Three weekly newspapers are published here.—In the vicinity are many fine mill seats. On Poesten's Kill, which flows into the Hudson at the lower end of the city, there are 5 flour mills, an oil mill, and a distillery; and on Wynant's Kill, which runs into the Hudson, 2 miles lower down, there are 3 flour mills, a paper mill, a cotton manufactory, a gun manufactory, a shovel manufactory, and 2 nail manufactories. These streams afford some of the finest mill seats in the country.—This city suffered very severely by fire on the 20th of June, 1820. The damage was estimated at about $1,000,000.

Troy, (in Latin, Troja, Ilium, or Dardania,) city & capital of Troas, opposite to the island of Tenedos, on the Xanthus, supposed to have been about 4 m. from the sea, and near Mount Ida. Pergamus, or Pergama, the name of the citadel, is also often applied to the city. It is famous for a memorable siege, in which all the states of Greece were united, who came, according to the ancient writers, with from 1,000 to 1,200 ships, bringing, it has been supposed, as many as 100,000 men. The city, after being besieged 10 years, was taken, according to the Arundelian marbles, B. C. 1184. See Troad.

Troyes, (an. Augustobona,) city, France, and capital of Aube, on the Seine; 18 posts NNW. Dijon, 19 SE. Paris. Lon. 4. 5. E. Lat. 48. 18. N. P. 26,702. H. 2,500. Bp. see. It is an old town, ill built, surrounded with a wall, and has a castle, a cathedral, several churches, a hospital, a royal college, a society of arts, & a public library of 40,000 volumes. The manufactures are considerable, consisting of cottons, linens, woollens, &c. Before the revolution, it was the capital of Champagne. The environs produce grain, legumes, and fruit in abundance.—In 1419, a peace was concluded here between England & France.—Natives, Pope Urban IV., Lenoble, Passerat, Pithon, Mignard, Legentil, and Girardon.

Truxillo, intendancy, Peru, comprising the northern part of the country, bounded NW. by the river Tumbez and Guayaquil, N. by the Tunguragua, NE. by Jaen de Bracamoros, E. by the Rio Guallaga and Pampas del Sacramento, S. by Tarma, and W. by the Pacific. It is divided into 7 jurisdictions, Sana, Piuru, Truxillo, Caxamarca, Chachapoyas, Llulia, Chiloas, and Pataz.

Truxillo, jurisdiction, in the above intendancy, bounded N. by Caxamarca, E. by Guamachuco, S. by the river Sana, and W. by the Pacific. It extends about 20 leagues along the coast, and as many in the interior. The climate is temperate and healthy; the soil fertile, producing wheat, maize, wine, olives, sugar canes, and fruits of various kinds.

Truxillo, t. Peru, capital of the above intendancy and jurisdiction; 268 NNW. Lima, 480 S. Quito. Lon. 78.53.W. Lat. 8.8.S. Pop. 5,800. Bp. see. It stands on a small river, about half a league from the sea, and carries on its commerce by means of its port Guamachuco, two leagues to the north, which is the only good harbour on the coast, from Callao to Tumbez. It is pleasantly situated, surrounded by gardens, groves, and delightful walks, and encompassed by a low brick wall, flanked by 15 bastions. It contains the revenue office, a cathedral, several convents, 2 nunneries, a college, & a hospital. The houses, mostly of brick, have a neat appearance, but are low on account of the frequency of earthquakes. It was founded in 1535 by Pizarro.

Tuam, t. Ireland, in Galway ; 17 NNE. Galway, 93 SW. Dublin. Abp. see. It is large, populous, and well built, consisting of 4 principal streets ; It has an elegant mall, a cathedral, an episcopal palace, a diocesan school, and a market house. It has a great variety of shops, well assorted, and carries on a brisk retail trade ; and the linen manufactures is extending in the neighbourhood. Before the union it sent two members to parliament.

Tuarick, a numerous people of Central Africa, inhabiting all the territory to the west and south of Soudan, and as far as the country on the Niger. They consist of various tribes, among the most powerful of which are the Graat, who inhabit the neighbourhood of Gadamis ; the Kolluvi, who possess the powerful kingdom of Asben ; and the Tagama, who immediately border on Soudan. They speak the Breber language.—They are described by captain Lyon as the finest race of men he ever saw, tall, erect, and handsome, with an imposing air of pride and independence. Their skin is generally white, except the parts exposed to the sun, which are a dark brown. They are never seen without a dagger ; and many of them subsist by plunder. The tribes that border on Soudan, carry off from that region an immense number of slaves. They are exceedingly superstitious.

Tuat, or Twat, country, Africa, in the Great Desert. Lon. 1. to 6. E. Lat. 23. N. It is an oasis in the heart of the desert. S.; 370 leagues long, from N. to S., 190 broad. Pop. estimated at 45,000. Chief town, St. Miguel de Tucuman. The surface is various; on the west is the great chain of the Andes, from which branches extend into this province. In some parts are extensive plains covered with fossil salt. The rivers and lakes are numerous, and are mostly brackish. The principal rivers are the Veranejo, Salado, Xuxuy, Dulce, and Querto. The soil produces all kinds of grain, esculent plants, and fruit in abundance, with excellent pasture for innumerable herds of cattle, mules, and horses. Cotton, tobacco, vines, cocoa, cochineal, indigo, and flax are cultivated. Mules constitute the great object of commerce; mostly driven to Peru; 50,000 being sold annually, and with them are driven from 14,000 to 16,000 cows.

Tver, or Tverskoe, gov. Eu. Russia, bounded

N. by Novgorod & Jaroslav, E. by Jaroslav, Vladimir and Moscow, S. by Smolensk, and W. by Pskov. Pop. 1,065,000. Sq. m. 24,105. It is divided into 12 circles, Tver, Kashin, Beshezk, Vischneivologok, Ostaschkow, Rshev-Wladimirov, Stariza, Torshok, Kaljasin, Kortsheva, Subzow, and Wesijegonsk. The surface is level, with numerous undulations, but no hills. The climate temperate, but changeable; the soil moderately fertile; the rivers are Wolga, Dwina, Msta, Tvertza, and Mologa.

Tver, or Twer, t. Russia, capital of the above government, on the Wolga, at the junction of the Tvertza and Tmaka; 75 WNW. Moscow, 272 SE. Petersburg, 580 NE. Warsaw. Pop. in 1784, 15,095; in 1817, estimated at 20,000. Abp. see. The rivers divided it into 4 parts, which are united by 3 bridges, the one over the Wolga being of boats. It contains a cathedral, palace, government offices, hospitals, 28 churches, a gymnasium, a school for the nobility, and an ecclesiastical seminary, which admits 600 students. Tver has been repeatedly ravaged by fire, particularly in 1763, when only a few houses were saved. The town was rebuilt on a regular plan by the order of the empress Catharine, who erected the public buildings at her own expense; in consequence Tver is the most regular city in Russia after Petersburg and Moscow. The streets are broad and perfectly straight, all proceeding from an open space in the centre of the town, in the form of an octagon. The houses surrounding this space and in the principal streets are of brick, stuccoed white, and have an elegant appearance.—The manufactures consist of linen, wax, leather, candles, and hardware. The traffic is considerable; the exports, corn, hemp, and iron.

Tunbridge Wells, t. Eng., in Kent; 5 m. from Tunbridge. It is an appellation given to a series of scattered villages, which are nearly 2 miles in length, and owe their origin and importance to the celebrated mineral waters in the vicinity; consisting of 4 divisions, Mount Ephraim, Mount Pleasant, Mount Sion, and the Wells, properly so called. The air of this district is remarkably pure and salubrious, the appearance of the country inviting, and the aspect of the villages is picturesque, appearing like a large town in a wood, interspersed with rich meadows, and inclosing a large common, in which are walks, rides, handsome rows of trees, and other objects of variety. Here are excellent accommodations for visitants, also assembly rooms, theatre, libraries, chapel, market place, &c. The waters are chalybeate, extremely clear and pellucid at the fountain head, & the taste is strongly impregnated with iron. They are of great use in removing complaints arising from sedentary habits, weak digestion, & nervous and chronical disorders. The discovery of them is ascribed to Dudley, lord North, a courtier in the reign of James I., who was restored to health by drinking the waters.—A variety of toys in wood of various kinds are manufactured here, and known by the name of Tunbridge ware.—The high rocks, $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. from the wells, are much celebrated. In some parts they are 75 feet high, and form a very striking and romantic picture.

It is of a conical figure, regularly sloped on all sides, rising 16,500 feet above the level of the sea, being always covered with snow. It is volcanic, and often bursts forth in the most violent eruptions, by one of which the town of Riobamba was destroyed. Some hot springs gush out from its sides, & warm baths have been erected, and are much frequented.

Tunguses, or Tongusy Tartars, a wandering native race of Asiatic Russia, and covering almost all the southeastern part of Siberia; extending from the Enisei to the sea of Ochotsk. No. according to the last enumeration, 43,471; 24,278 in the government of Irkutsk, & 19,193 in the government of Tobolsk. They are of middle size, have long black hair, a smiling countenance, and small eyes; are of robust constitution, and possessed of the greatest agility. They employ themselves solely in hunting and fishing. The delicacy of their sight and smell is almost incredible. They are brave, honest, frank, and sincere. Their religion is a species of Shamanism.

Tunis, one of the Barbary states, Africa, bounded N. by the Mediterranean, E. by the Mediterranean and Tripoli, S. by Tripoli and the deserts, and W. by Algiers. It consists chiefly of a large peninsula, stretching into the Mediterranean in a NE. direction, and coming within 100 miles of the coast of Sicily. It has an extent of about 500 miles of coast on the Mediterranean; & the cultivated part reaches 200 or 250 miles into the interior, till it terminates with the chain of Atlas and desert plains. Sq. m. according to Gatterer, 72,000; according to Graberg, 76,300. Pop. uncertain, and variously estimated from 1,000,000 to 3,000,000; about 100,000 Jews, several thousand Christian slaves, and the rest Mahometans. It is divided into two circuits, northern and southern. The chief towns are Tunis, the capital, Gafsa, Cebes, and Bizerta.

Tunis is watered by the noble river Mejerdah, on the banks of which are many towns and large villages. Its banks, and the country to the eastward, are very fertile, presenting great natural beauty, and are the best cultivated parts of the country. The western part being exposed to the inroads of the Algerines, is more thinly inhabited, and in many places almost a desert. The tracts to the south, called Bled el Jerede, or the country of dates, though less fertile than the parts on the sea-coast, yield in plenty not only dates, but grain of different kinds, and contain several large villages. The inhabitants of these parts are mostly governed by chiefs of their own.

The mountains of Tunis contain mines of silver, copper, lead, and quicksilver, but they are not wrought. The situation of the country is very favourable for commerce, & the amount is considerable. The exports consist of grain, the principal article, next olive oil, wool, and soap; also sponge and orchilla weed; also, brought by caravans from Tombuctoo, gold dust, ivory, and ostrich feathers. The imports are European manufactures, colonial produce, and East India cottons. Tunis was annexed, in 1574, to the Turkish empire, and was governed for sometime by its viceroys, called Deys; but the people, or rather the soldiery, acquired the privilege of electing their own dey, & this officer may now be considered as entirely independent of the Porte.

Tunis, (an. Tunes, Tuneta, or Leucon Tuneta), city, Africa, capital of the above state; 300 E. Algiers, 300 NW. Tripoli. Lon. 10. 20. E. Lat. 36. 44. N. Pop. according to Ali Bey, 120,000; Jews 30,000, Christians 1,500. H. 12,000. Some state the population much lower, others raise it to 150,000. It is situated at the bottom of a large bay, about 10 SW. of the site of ancient Carthage, on a plain, surrounded on all sides, except the east, by considerable heights, encircled by lakes & marshes, but is not unhealthy. It is built in a most irregular manner, and the streets are so extremely narrow and filthy, that it is with difficulty that they can be passed through. It is by no means distinguished for magnificent edifices. The most superb structure is the palace for the bey, very recently built, in the Gothic or Saracenic style, and is a very magnificent edifice, one of the finest in Barbary. There is one great mosque and a number of smaller ones, with several colleges and schools, and near the centre is a piazza of vast extent, said to have formerly contained 3,000 shops for the sale of woollen and linen manufactures. The houses belonging to European consuls are all insulated habitations, rather resembling prisons than the abodes of those who represent the dignity of great nations. The Moorish houses are of only one story, with flat roofs, and cisterns for the purpose of collecting rain water. The city is, however, well supplied with water from a neighbouring spring, conveyed into it by a fine aqueduct.—Large sums have been expended in the construction of forts, and in surrounding the city with a high wall, yet it is by no means a strong place. The citadel, called El Gassa, is much out of repair. Six miles to the west is the Goletta, the celebrated harbour and citadel of Tunis, and the great naval and commercial depot of the state. It is strongly fortified. A basin has been formed sufficient to receive all the vessels of war and merchant ships belonging to Tunis. A large lake extends from the city to the Goletta. Tunis has a much more extensive commerce than any other town in Barbary.

The pastoral tribes that wander over the vast, uncultivated plains of Persia, and the regions bordering on Asia Minor, are also called Turcomans. They disdain agriculture, and employ themselves in rearing horses and cattle. They live in tents of felt; their food consists of horse flesh and sour milk; their religion Mahometanism.

Turin, (an. Colonia Julia, & Augusta Taurinorum,) city, Italy, chief city of Piedmont, the capital and seat of the Sardinian monarchy, on W. side of the Po, near the junction of the Doria Riparia; 66 NE. Genoa, 75 WSW. Milan. Lon. 7. 40. E. Lat. 45. 4. N. Pop. in 1817, 88,570; in 1820, 90,000. Jews 1,450. Abp. see. It has an extremely agreeable situation, on a delightful plain, in a luxuriant country; a beautiful range of hills rising on one side of the river; on the other a plain strewed with villas and gardens, extending to the base of the Alps. The town is of oblong form, and, including the ramparts, 4 miles in circuit. The streets are generally wide and straight, intersecting each other at right angles, and running in direct lines from one extremity of the city to the other. They are kept clean by means of streams of clear running water. The principal square, called Piazza Reale, both for size and beauty, ranks as one of the first in Europe. Several of the streets have at the sides arcades or piazzas, affording a convenient walk for foot passengers. The houses are generally of brick, and the best are plastered in front with stucco. Of the public walks, the most frequented are public gardens.

The public edifices of Turin are built or ornamented with marble of every vein and colour, but the ornaments are too profusely scattered, and there is hardly one chaste model of architecture. The royal palace is of great extent; the cathedral is an old Gothic edifice. There are 42 chh., 5 hospitals, well endowed, 4 theatres, a school for the nobility, a lyceum, a seminary for the education of clergymen, agricultural and veterinary schools; a university well endowed, having a library of 60,000 volumes, a museum containing large collections of statues, vases, and medals, an observatory, an anatomical hall, and one of the best botanic gardens in Europe. The manufactures are not extensive; the principal articles are woollen, cotton, leather, stone ware, silks, damask, velvet, tobacco, snuff, and paper. The Po is here navigable, and is advantageous for the transport of heavy articles. The citadel and other fortifications of Turin, formerly placed it among the strongest towns in Europe, but they were demolished by the French after the battle of Marengo.

Turkestan, or Turan, country, Asia, bounded N. by deserts, which separate it from the dominions of Russia, on E. by a part of Tartary, belonging to the Calmucks, S. by Bukharia, and W. by Charasm; near 300 miles in length, and not much less in breadth. It is at present divided between two Tartar khans or chiefs; one of them, residing at Tashkund, possesses the eastern part; the other, who possesses the western part, resides at Turkestan or Taraz. The latter is generally called the khan of the Karakalpaks. Turkestan, taken in a larger sense, is understood to include all the country between Russia to the N. and Bukharia to the S., and between the Caspian sea to the W., and Chinese Tartary on the E., not less than 700 miles from E. to W., and 350 from N. to S.

TURKEY, or the Ottoman Empire, a great sovereignty in Europe and Asia, extending from the Adriatic on the west to Persia on the east, and including many countries and provinces of great celebrity in sacred and profane history, once the finest in the world, but now, owing to the despotism and wretched policy of the Turks, comparatively desolate and miserable. The Turkish government also claims the sovereignty of Egypt, Tunis, Tripoli, and Algiers, in Africa, but her authority in these countries, is now but little more than nominal. The empire is distinguished into two great divisions, Turkey in Europe and Turkey in Asia.

TURKEY IN EUROPE is bounded N. by Hungary and Transylvania, and the Russian dominions, E. by the Black sea, the Bosphorus, sea of Marmora, Dardanelles, and Archipelago, S. by the Mediterranean, and W. by the Adriatic, Austrian Dalmatia, and Croatia. Its form is an irregular oblong, extending in length from the northern point of Moldavia to the extremity of the Morea, about 870 miles. Sq. m., according to Hassel, 184,440; Malte-Brun, 192,500; Cannabich, 197,160; Edinburgh Gazetteer, 200,000. Pop., according to Hassel, between 7,000,000 & 8,000,000; Malte-Brun, 9,500,000; Edinburgh Gazetteer, 9,660,000. About one third of the whole population are Turks and Tartars, the rest are composed of various nations, but are mostly Christians of the Greek church. The relative proportions, as well as the total population, are computed differently, there being no official returns in Turkey. The statement in the Edinburgh Gazetteer is as follows:

Turks or Tartars	-	-	-	3,500,000
Greeks or Hellenists	-	-	-	2,600,000
Dalmatians	-	-	-	800,000
Arnauts or Albanians	-	-	-	750,000
Bulgarians	-	-	-	500,000
Servians	-	-	-	450,000
Moldavians and Walachians	-	-	-	400,000
Jews	-	-	-	300,000
Bosniacs or Bosnians	-	-	-	250,000
Rascians or Raitzians	-	-	-	80,000
Croats or Croatians	-	-	-	30,000
Total				9,660,000

The proportion of the Greek church and of Turks in several of the provinces, has been recently stated in the continental journals as follows:

	Greek Ch.	Turks.
Macedonia	- 724,000	241,000
Thessaly	- 579,000	89,000
Albania	- 691,000	365,000
Morea	- 300,000	35,000
Bulgaria	- 620,000	170,000
Walachia	- 360,000	18,000
Servia	- 780,000	160,000
Bosnia & dependencies	420,000	140,000
		4,474,000
		1,218,000

A statement from the Novelles Annals des Voyages, by a Modern Greek:

Greeks, or people speaking Modern Greek	-	-	-	4,000,000
People of Slavonian origin	-	-	-	3,000,000
Turks	-	-	-	2,000,000
Albanians	-	-	-	1,200,000
Walachians, Moldavians, &c.	-	-	-	1,200,000
				11,400,000

About three fourths of the Albanians are Mahometans, one third of the Slavonians, a few of the Walachians and Greeks: about one third of the whole population are Mahometans; the rest mostly of the Greek church.

Towns. The chief towns are Constantinople, the capital, Adrianople, Salonica, Buckharest, Sophia, Joannina, Filippopoli, Brahilow, Seræ, Belgrade, Larissa, and Silistria.

Revenue, &c. The revenue scarcely amounts 80,000,000 francs, though the pachas take from the people 4 or 5 times that amount—The army is stated at 400,000; of which 30, or 40,000 are Janissaries. The navy consists of 15 or 20 ships of the line, 15 frigates, and 60 galleys. The vessels are manned chiefly by Greeks and Algerines. The principal dockyards are at Metelin, Stanchio, Sinob, and Constantinople.

Divisions. Turkey in Europe comprehends the ancient countries of Greece with its islands, in the south; Macedonia, Epirus, and Thrace, in the centre; Mæsia, part of Dacia, Pannonia, and Illyria, in the north. A division of more recent date, and the one currently used in maps, and books of travels and geography, is into the Morea, Livadia, Thessaly, Macedonia, Albania, Romania, Bulgaria, Walachia, Moldavia, Servia, and Bosnia. But the Turkish civil division is into 2 beglerbeg-ships, Romania, or Rum-ili, and Bosnia, which are subdivided into 34 sangiacats. Some districts are not included in these divisions, as Constantinople and Adrianople, with their respective territories, Candia, and the islands in the Archipelago.

Government. The government is despotic. The emperor, who is styled sultan or grand seignior, is the sole fountain of honour and office, and has absolute power of life and death. Though unchecked by any representative body, he is virtually restrained by the ordinances of the Koran, by certain usages, and by the decisions of the ulema and mufti. The prime minister is called the grand vizier. The divan, or cabinet council, was formerly composed of 6 pachas of the first rank, but is now limited to the vizier, mufti, and kioga bey, who is lieutenant of the vizier. Other high officers are called in on extraordinary occasions. The ulema are a numerous body, combining the character of clergy and lawyers, and have at their head the grand mufti, who is the head religious establishment, and the second subject in the empire. A pacha of the first class, styled a pacha of three tails, has a right to punish capitally any subordinate functionary.—The court of the sultan is styled the Porte, or Ottoman Porte.

Religion, &c. The Turks are Mahometans of the sect of Omar. Polygamy is permitted, but seldom practised; but the rich are in the habit of keeping concubines. The personal appearance of the Turks is, in general, prepossessing. They are well proportioned, have dark eyes, and an aquiline nose. They have a slow and stately gait, a solemn air, are temperate in eating and drinking, hospitable and courageous, but their religion inspires them with contempt for those of a different creed. They are haughty, intolerant, and perfidious. The head of the Greek church is the patriarch of Constantinople, who is a person of great dignity, having numerous archbishops and bishops under him. A striking mark of Turkish hospitality is seen in the caravansaries, which are met with in almost every village. In these travellers may remain three days gratis.

Face of the country, &c. The surface of the north part is mostly level or moderately uneven; the middle and southern portions are greatly diversified with mountains. The Carpathian mountains lie on the north, farther to the south are the ancient Hæmus and Rhodope. In Greece are Pindus, Olympus, Parnassus, &c. In soil and climate the Turkish dominions are highly favoured. The soil produces wheat, maize, rice, cotton, silk, wine, fruits, &c., but is miserably cultivated.

Rivers, seas, & islands. In the northern part is the Danube with its branches, the Pruth, Sereth, Aluta, Save, and Morava. In the west are the Drino, Narenta, Viza, and Achelous; in the SE. the Merizza and Vardar. The lakes are not considerable, but the gulfs and bays are extremely numerous. Among the islands are Candia, Negropont, Stalimene, Syra, Tino, Andro, Santorin, Naxia, Milo, Myconi, &c. See Greece, Romania, Thessaly, &c.

History. The Turks are a Tartar nation from Asia. The earliest notice of them in history is about the year 800, when issuing from an obscure retreat they took possession of a part of Armenia, called from them Turcomania. Their dominions, divided for some time into petty states, were united under Othman or Osman, who assumed the title of sultan, and established his empire at Prusa in Bithynia, about the year 1300. Adrianople was taken by them about 1360; and in 1452, under Mahomet II. they took Constantinople, and put an end to the eastern empire.

TURKEY IN ASIA is bounded N. by the Black sea and Asiatic Russia, E. by Asiatic Russia and Persia, S. by Arabia, and the Mediterranean, W. by the Mediterranean and the Archipelago. Sq. m., according to Pinkerton, 470,400; Hassel, 514,300; Malte-Brun, 531,300. Pop. estimated from 10, to 12,000,000; by Malte-Brun at 11,500,000; by Hassel at about 12,000,000; about one half Turks, the other half Greeks, Armenians, Turkmen, Arabians, Jews, Kurds, Syrians, Druses, Maronites, Gipsies, &c.

Divisions. The principal divisions or countries are Natolia, Syria including Palestine, Armenia, Diarbekir, Curdistan, & Irak Arabi, or Bagdad. See each. It is divided by the Turks into 17 pachalics: Anadoli or Natolia, Sivas, Trebisond, Konieh, Marasch, Adana, Kars, Van, Erzerum, Diarbekir, Ourfa, Mosul, Bagdad, Aleppo, Tripoli, Acre, and Damascus. These are subdivided into sangiacats. The eastern parts scarcely own the supremacy of the Ottoman Porte. The government, in many parts, is in great disorder, and the mountain districts are occupied by a number of petty, independent, and warlike chieftains.

Cities. The principal cities are Aleppo, Damascus, Smyrna, Erzerum, Bagdad, Bursa, Tocat, Mosul, Diarbekir, Hamah, Aphiom-Karahissar, Bassora, Kiutaja, Angora, Amasia, and Guzel-hisar.

Rivers. The principal rivers are the Euphrates, Tigris, Orontes, Kizil-ermak, Meinder, and Sarabat.

Islands. The principal islands are Cyprus, Rhodes, Metelin, Samos, Scio, and Cos.

Face of the country. Natolia and Syria are greatly diversified with hills, mountains, and plains. Armenia is very mountainous. The country on the Euphrates and Tigris is mostly level; bordering on Arabia are extensive deserts. Some of the mountains are Ida, Olympus, Taurus, Lebanon, and Ararat.

Pop. in 1821, about 700. This town was first settled in 1816-17, and contains a printing office, 2 houses of public worship, 1 for Methodists and 1 for Baptists, and 15 trading houses. The houses are generally built of round poles, and boards made by splitting pine logs. At the falls of the river at this place is an extensive bed of excellent fossil coal. Tuscaloosa is the Choctaw Indian name of Black Warrior.

TUSCANY, (an. Etruria), grand duchy, Italy, bounded N. by Modena and the States of the Church, E. by the States of the Church, SW. by that part of the Mediterranean called the Tuscan or Tyrrhenean sea. Sq. m. 8,380. It includes Elba and some smaller islands. It is divided into 3 provinces, Florence, Pisa, and Sienna. Chief towns, Florence, the capital, Leghorn, the chief seaport, Sienna, Pisa, Arezzo, Cortona, and Piombino.

Population. The population was stated in 1803, at 1,058,931; in towns 211,695; in the country 847,236. Engaged in agriculture 901,110; in commerce and manufactures 81,661; in public affairs 50,000; military 4,000; religious 22,160. Pop. in 1810, 1,178,522.

Religion. There are about 16,000 Jews, the remainder are almost all Catholics. There are 3 archbishops, (of Florence, Pisa, and Sienna,) 16 bishops, 2,300 curates, 5,600 monks and nuns. Revenue of the church £1,575,000.

Government, &c. The government is monarchical, without any written constitution or representative body. The title of the sovereign is archduke of Austria and grand duke of Tuscany. The revenue is about $3,063,000; expenditure $3,125,000; the national debt $22,000,000.—There are universities at Florence, Pisa, and Sienna. Florence is distinguished for the fine arts. The Tuscans have more activity and enterprise than most of their Italian neighbours.

Face of the country. The face of the country is agreeably diversified with hills, valleys, and plains. The Apennines entering on the north, traverse the country in a SE. direction. In Tuscany their highest summits do not exceed 3,000 feet, sometimes bleak and sterile, but generally covered to the tops with vegetation and forests. The country is well watered by numerous streams; the most considerable are the Arno, Cambrone, and Chiana.

Climate, soil, productions, &c. The climate is generally pleasant and healthy, except the Marremma, a maritime district. The soil, for the most part, is a rich alluvial mould. The chief objects of culture are wheat, maize, beans, pease, and a variety of vegetables; also clover and other artificial grasses; vines, mulberries, olives, oranges, lemons, figs; and rice in the marshy parts. Sheep and cattle are numerous in the mountainous districts. There are mines of copper, lead, and quicksilver; also marble, alabaster, crystal, and rock salt. There are scarcely any large farms, but the land is divided into petty lots, and the culture takes place more commonly by the spade than the plough. Tuscany is no longer conspicuous in manufactures; the most important article is silk. The commerce is considerable, and carried on chiefly through the port of Leghorn.

Tyrol, (an. Terioli), citadel, which gives name to the Tyrol ; 1 N. Meran, 30 N. Trent. Lon. 11. E. Lat. 46. 37. N.

TYROL, called also Upper Austria, pr. Austrian empire, bounded N. by Bavaria, E. by the archduchy of Austria and Carinthia, S. by Austrian Italy, and W. by Switzerland. Sq. m. 11,033. Pop. 717,542. H. 99,800. It is divided into 7 circles, Upper Inthal, Lower Inthal, Pustertal, Voralberg, Adige, Italian confines of Trent, and Italian confines of Roveredo.—The principal towns are Inspruck, the capital, Roveredo, Trent, Schwatz, Bolzano, Imbst, Brauneck, Bregentz, Ala, Hall, and Pergina.

Face of the country, &c. Of all the countries in Europe, Tyrol is the most exclusively mountainous. The Tyrolese Alps extend through the country. Some of the most remarkable summits are Ortler, Glockner, and Brenner. Tyrol resembles Switzerland; the valleys and lakes are less extensive; the cascades less numerous; but there is the same sublime scenery; similar lofty and perpendicular mountains, covered with perpetual snow and ice; the same contrast of the beautiful and terrific; of vineyards and wastes; of uninhabited summits, and populous valleys. No country contains a more romantic road than that over Mount Brenner, along the Adige. The climate, in consequence of the height of the mountains, is cold.

Productions, &c. Among the productions are corn, wine, silk, hemp, flax, and tobacco. The quantity of corn is not sufficient for the inhabitants; in many parts the raising of cattle is the principal employment. Almost all kinds of minerals have been found, but the only mines that have been worked to advantage, are those of salt, iron, copper, and calamine. There are no less than 60 mineral springs in the country.

Inhabitants. The Tyrolese are characterised by their domestic affections, sincerity of character, unostentatious manners, frugal mode of living, and attachment to their country. They are credulous and superstitious. The inhabitants of the towns are more polished, and those on the southern borders partake of the character of their Italian neighbours. The language of the Tyrolese is for the most part German. Tyrol, in official papers, bears only the title of county; it has a representative body consisting of 4 orders. It formed a part of the ancient Rhetia.

Ulm, t. Wurt., capital of the circle of the Danube, on the Danube ; 44 SE. Stutgard, 40 W. Augsburg, 60 N. Munich. Lon. 9. 59. E. Lat. 48. 24. N. Pop. in 1806, 14,225. H. 1,626. It is an ancient town, and has an antique appearance ; the streets crooked, the houses in the old German style, with a height of roof beyond proportion to the height of the walls. Some of the streets are well paved. Here are 3 Luth., and 2 Cath. chh., a royal hospital, an arsenal, a town house, a theatre, and a gymnasium. The minster, or great Gothic church, is 416 feet long, and 160 broad. Ulm was long a free city of the German empire ; the diet of Swabia was usually held here, and here were deposited the archives of the imperial towns of Swabia and Franconia. The linen manufacture, though less than formerly, is still considerable.—Ulm, occupying an important military pass, is well known in the wars of Germany, and has long been fortified. It is now one of the fortresses of the German empire ; & in 1818, the Germanic diet voted to appropriate the sum of £800,000 to complete its fortification, in order to render it a fortress of the first rank.

Ummerapoor, city & capital of the Birman empire. Lon. 96. 7. E. Lat. 21. 55. N. It stands on the shores of a romantic lake, 7 miles long, and one and a half broad, at a short distance from the Irrawaddy. It is regularly laid out as an exact square and fortified; divided into 4 quarters, and is 2 miles in circuit. The streets are wide, and intersect each other at right angles. In the centre stands the royal palace, which consists of a number of wooden buildings of various forms, the domes of which are covered with gilt copper, and make a splendid appearance. The fortifications of the city consist of a good rampart about 20 feet high, having 4 large bastions at the corners, and 44 smaller ones at the faces. This city was founded by the late emperor, Minderajee Praw, so recently as 1783, about 4 E. of Old Ava, the ancient capital; the buildings, with the exception of some temples, being constructed of wood, it was completed in a very short time. About 1800, the population was estimated by captain Cox at 175,000, and the number of houses from 20, to 25,000. Its site is nearly surrounded by water, and is unhealthy to strangers.

United Provinces, name given to the 7 Protestant states of Holland, or the Netherlands, which threw off the yoke of Spain, and became independent. See Holland and Netherlands.

UNITED STATES, the great middle division of N. America, bounded N. by New Britain and Upper and Lower Canada, E. by New-Brunswick and the Atlantic ocean, S. by the gulf of Mexico, SW. & S. by the country of Mexico, and W. by the Pacific ocean. The boundary between the United States and the British dominions, begins at the entrance of the St. Croix into the Atlantic, proceeding up that river to its source; thence due north to the highlands which separate the waters falling into the Atlantic from those falling into the St. Lawrence; thence along those highlands in a SW. direction to the parallel of Lat. 45. N.; thence along that parallel to the river St. Lawrence; thence up that river, and through the middle of the great lakes, Ontario, Erie, Huron, and Superior, to the NW. extremity of the Lake of the Woods; thence on the meridian line to the parallel of Lat. 49. N.; thence along that parallel to the Rocky mountains. Between the Rocky mountains and the Pacific ocean the boundary is not yet settled. The boundary on the side of Mexico, as ratified by a treaty with Spain in 1821, begins on the gulf of Mexico at the mouth of Sabine river, proceeding along the west bank of that river to Lat. 32. N.; thence by a line due north to Red river; thence up that river to the meridian of Lon. 100. W.; thence due north along that meridian to the river Arkansas; thence along the south bank of the Arkansas to its source; thence due north or south, as the case may be, to the parallel of Lat. 42. N.; and thence along that parallel to the Pacific ocean. Lon. 66. 49. to 125. W. Lat. 25. to 49. N. Sq. m. estimated at upwards of 2,000,000. More than half of the territory included within these limits, contains few or no settlers, and is not yet formed into states. If a line were drawn from the mouth of the Sabine due north to the Missouri; thence in a north easterly direction to the south end of lake Michigan, the eastern division would include nearly all the population, though less than half of the territory. The other division is almost wholly in the possession of the Indians.

Divisions. The original number of states, at the formation of the government, was 13; the present number 24. In addition to these, the small district of Columbia, and 5 large districts of country, styled territories, belong to the union. The states are distinguished into 4 general divisions, the New England, or Eastern States, the Middle, the Southern, and the Western States.

The following table exhibits the several divisions, together with the square miles, population, population to a square mile, representative number, number of representatives to congress, banks, newspapers, date of admission into the union of such as have been added to the 13 original states, and seat of government.

Fate of the country and mountains. This country has every variety of surface, embracing vast ranges of mountains, and extensive plains and valleys. The two principal ranges of mountains are the Alleghany mountains in the east, and the Rocky mountains in the west. The immense valley between these ranges is intersected by the Mississippi, and watered by its numerous tributaries. A great part of this region is level, or but moderately uneven. The New England or Eastern states are generally uneven, and in many parts mountainous. South of Long Island, the coast, in some parts, for the space of 100 miles from the sea, is mostly a flat, sandy plain, but little elevated above the level of the ocean. Beyond the head of tide waters, the country becomes hilly and mountainous. The White mountains, in New Hampshire, are the highest east of the Mississippi. The elevation of the Rocky mountains is much greater than that of the Alleghanies, and is estimated at 9,000 feet.

Soil and productions. In the eastern states much of the soil is fertile, but a great proportion of it is rocky, in many parts of little depth, and difficult cultivation, and it is generally better adapted to grazing than tillage. The sandy country, south of Long Island, along the sea coast, is covered with pines. The parts cultivated are the marshy spots on the rivers and streams, on which rice is raised. Much of the soil in the country, above this tract, is fertile, and well adapted to agriculture. The extensive region west of the Alleghanies is generally bottomed on limestone, and contains a great proportion of the first rate soil. Beef, pork, butter, and cheese are among the principal productions of the eastern states; of the middle states, wheat; further south, wheat and tobacco; of the southern states, cotton & rice; of Louisiana, cotton, sugar, and rice; of the western states, wheat, maize, hemp, cotton, & tobacco. Wheat, maize, and other kinds of grain are cultivated in all the states, and fruits in great variety abound.

Minerals. Iron, coal, lime, and salt, productions of primary necessity, exist in abundance; also lead, marble, gypsum, &c. Mineral springs are numerous; the most celebrated are those of Saratoga, N. Y.

Climate. The climate differs greatly in different parts. In the north, the extremes of heat and cold are great, but the climate is healthy. In the south-eastern and southern parts, along the Atlantic and gulf of Mexico, the climate from July to November is unhealthy. Evaporation is more rapid in this country than in Europe, and consequently the air is drier. The annual quantity of rain is greater here than in Europe, but the proportion of fair weather is also greater, as the rain here falls in much heavier showers.—The forwardness of spring in the northern and southern extremities of the union, differs about 2½ months, as is indicated in the following statement, respecting the flowering of the peach tree, in 1817.

Seas, Bays, &c. The Atlantic ocean lies on the east, the Pacific on the west, and the gulf of Mexico on the south. The largest bays are Passamaquoddy, Massachusetts, Delaware, and Chesapeake. The principal sounds are Long Island sound, Albemarle, and Pamlico sounds. The largest lakes included wholly within the United States, are Michigan and Champlain. The great lakes, Superior, Huron, Erie, and Ontario, lie partly within the U. S., and partly in the British dominions.—The principal canals are the Middlesex canal, the Northern or Champlain canal, and the Erie or Grand Western canal.

Rivers. This country is intersected by a great number of rivers, which afford great facilities for inland navigation. Some of the principal are the following :

Government. The United States form a federal republic. Each state is independent, and has a separate legislature, executive, & judiciary; but the defence of the country, the regulation of commerce, and the general interests of the confederacy, are entrusted to the general government. The legislative power is vested in a congress, composed of a senate, consisting of 2 members from each state, chosen by the state legislatures for 6 years; and of a house of representatives, elected by the people for 2 years, one representative being returned for every 40,000 inhabitants. In the slave holding states, every 5 slaves are allowed to count the same as 3 freemen. The executive power is vested in a president, who, together with a vice president, is chosen for 4 years by electors from all the states. The principal subordinate officers in the executive department, are the secretaries of state, of the treasury, of war, and of the navy. The judiciary is independent of the legislature. The supreme court is composed of 7 judges. All power originates with the people. The constitution secures to the citizens the grand principles of freedom, liberty of conscience in matters of religion, liberty of the press, trial by jury, and the right of choosing & being chosen to office.

History. The United States were originally colonies of Great Britain. The first English settlement was made, in 1607, at Jamestown, Va.; in 1614, New York was settled by the Dutch; and in 1620, the first settlement in New England was made at Plymouth.

In 1775, hostilities were commenced between Great Britain and the colonies; and in 1776, on the 4th of July, the latter made a declaration of independence, which was acknowledged by Great Britain in 1783. The present constitution was formed in 1788. In 1812, June 14th, the United States declared war against Great Britain, which continued till Feb. 17th, 1815, when peace was again restored. The following view exhibits the succession of presidents of the United States.

Education. This country is more distinguished for the general diffusion of knowledge, than for eminence in literature or science. The means of common education are widely extended, and there are numerous seminaries of learning throughout the country, though there are no literary establishments on so large a scale as many in Europe. The following table exhibits some of the principal colleges, together with the date of incorporation, the number of professors and undergraduates, and the number of volumes contained in the libraries.

Medical schools are connected with several of the above colleges, but the medical professors and students are not included in the table. In addition to the above, colleges have been established at Waterville, Burlington, Philadelphia, Cannonsburg, Washington, Pa., Annapolis, Georgetown, Washington, Ca., Charlottesville, Williamsburg, Lexington, Va., Athens, Ga., Athens, Ohio, Cincinnati, Greenville, Knoxville, & at some other places. There are medical schools at Brunswick, Hanover, Burlington, Cambridge, New Haven, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Lexington, Cincinnati, &c.; & theological seminaries at Bangor, Andover, Cambridge, New York, Princeton, New Brunswick, &c.

Religion. No religion is established or supported by government; every individual being left to support voluntarily that form of religion which he chooses. All denominations are placed on a level with each other, and no person is disqualified from exercising any office by his religious profession. In a great part of the country, religion is honourably supported. The great body of the people belong to some one or other of the several denominations of Christians. The following statement presents a view of the principal denominations.

Gongregations.		Cong.
Baptists	3,298	Episcopalians 400
Methodists	1,875	Dutch Reformed 150

Congregational'ts	1,200	other Presbyt. }
German Lutherans	650	German Calv. 100
Friends or Quakers	525	Moravians 50
The Roman Catholics have one archbishop, and four bishops. There are a few Universalists, Shakers, Tunkers, Mennonists, Swedenborgians, and Jews. The Baptists and Methodists are found in all parts of the union; the Congregationalists chiefly in New England; the Presbyterians mostly in the middle & southern states; the Catholics chiefly in Maryland & Louisiana; the German Lutherans, Dutch Reformed, Associate Presbyterians, German Calvinists, Quakers, and Moravians, principally in the middle states.

Inhabitants. The inhabitants are whites, negroes, and Indians. The whites are of European descent, chiefly English, especially the inhabitants of New England, Virginia, and the Carolinas. The Germans are most numerous in Pennsylvania, the Dutch in New York, and the French in Louisiana. Irish, Scotch, Swedes, and Spaniards are found in considerable numbers in different parts. The negroes are mostly held in slavery, and are chiefly found in the southern states. The Indians are independent of the government of the United States.

Utrecht, (New,) t. Kings co. N. Y., on W. end of Long Island, on E. side of the Narrows; 9 S. New-York. Pop. 1,009.

Utrecht, pr. Neth., one of the 7 Dutch provinces, bounded N. by the Zuyder Zee, E. & SE. by Guelderland, SW. & W. by Holland. Pop. in 1816, 107,642. H. 21,734. Sq. m. 507. The surface is level except in the south-east part, where there are sandy hills, or small eminences, with an unproductive soil. The rest is generally fertile, consisting of rich meadows and pasture, with turf grounds. It is traversed by branches of the Rhine, and has a better supply of springs and a purer air than the maritime provinces, but is inferior in trade; the exports are cattle, cheese, a little corn, &c.

Utrecht, (in Latin, Ultrajectum, Trajectum Inferius, Trajectum Ultricinium, and Antonia Civitas,) city, Neth., capital of the above province; 18 SSE. Amsterdam. Lon. 5. 7. E. Lat. 52. 6. N. Pop. 34,881. H. 8,000. It is situated on a branch of the Rhine, called Old Rhine, on a slight elevation, having a dry soil, and an atmosphere dry and healthy. Its form is nearly square, surrounded by an earthen mound and moat, and, exclusive of its suburbs, about three miles in circuit. The approaches to it are exceedingly beautiful, particularly that from Amsterdam, which consists of a broad avenue, bordered with rows of trees. The streets are of tolerable width, and intersected by canals, the level of which is about 20 feet below that of the pavement. The aspect of the city is antique; the houses are mostly of brick, built in the Gothic style. It contains a cathedral, 7 Dutch Ref. chh., 1 French Ref., 1 English, 1 Luth., 1 Arminian, 1 Mennonist, and 3 Cath., a town-house, a university, hospitals, and other charitable establishments. The cathedral, now partly in ruins, is a remarkable edifice: the tower, still entire, is said to have a height of 464 feet, and from its top, in a clear day, may be seen no less than 51 towns, great and small. The mall, situated out side of the walls, is a beautiful public walk. The trade is considerable, having the advantage of an inland navigation: the manufactures are on a small scale. The university, though less famous than that of Leyden, is of considerable note. It was founded in 1630, and has 5 faculties, 19 professors, a library, botanic garden, anatomical theatre, cabinet of natural history, and an observatory. Utrecht is famous as the place where, in 1579, was concluded the union of the seven Provinces; and also the well known treaty between the French and allies in 1713.—Native, Pope Adrian.

Valais, canton, Switz., bounded NW. by Vaud, N. by Berne, NE. by Uri and Tessin, E. and S. by Piedmont, and W. by Savoy. Sq. m. 2,035. Pop. 64,000. The chief town is Sion: the religion is Catholic; the language in the mountainous parts, German, in the low ground a dialect of French: the inhabitants being a mixed race, descended from the aborigines of France and Italy; of simple manners, ill educated; chiefly employed in rearing cattle; of low stature, and much subject to the gout.—This country in the middle ages, was called Valesia. It is the largest valley in Switzerland, watered in the whole extent by the Rhone; bordered on the north and south, by the loftiest mountains in Europe; exhibiting a striking contrast of scenery, the vales reminding the traveller of those of Tuscany, while the mountains are covered with forests, rocks, precipices, and glaciers. The productions and climate are various; the low grounds being hot, the ascent of the mountains temperate, and the high ground resembling the climate of Iceland. The chief exports are cattle, corn, and wine.

Valence, (an. Valentia, and Julia Augusta), city, France, capital of Drome, on the left side of the Rhone; 40 SW. Grenoble, 50 S. by E. Lyons. Lon. 4. 59. E. Lat. 44. 55. N. P. 8,057. H. 1,010. Bp. see. It is pleasantly situated, surrounded with walls, but is old, irregular, ill built, with narrow and dirty streets. It has a castle, a cathedral, 11 churches, an artillery school, and a public library. Before the revolution, it was the capital of Valentinois.

Valence en Albigeois, t. France, in Tarn; 12 NE. Alby, 21 SSW. Rhodéz. Pop. 713.

Valencia, pr. Spain, bounded N. by Aragon and Catalonia, on the E. and SE. by the Mediterranean, SW. by Murcia, and W. by New Castile; about 220 miles in length from N. to

S. ; the breadth is unequal, from 20 to 45. Sq. m. 7,764. Pop. in 1797, 825,059 ; according to Antillon, nearly 1,200,000. Chief city, Valencia ; chief seaport, Alicant. The surface is diversified with mountains, plains, and fertile valleys. The air is pure and dry, but subject to storms and the African wind, or solano. The principal exports are wine, silk, olive oil, and raisins ; other products are wheat, maize, rice, flax, hemp, &c. The rivers are the Xucar, Seguna, and Guadalaviar.

Valencia, city, Spain, capital of the above province, on the Guadalaviar, 2 miles from the sea ; 170 ESE. Madrid. Lon. 0. 23. W. Lat. 39. 29. N. Pop. about 80,000 in the city, and 15, or 18,000 in the villages and environs. Abp. see. It is situated in a fertile tract of country, and has a mild and pleasant climate. It contains a cathedral, 13 churches, 40 convents, 16 hospitals, 2 public libraries, an academy of painting, a college, a custom house, and a university. The streets are narrow and winding, crossed by a multiplicity of lanes. Many of the buildings are without chimneys. The university was founded in 1470, and has 58 professors, but the course of study is antiquated. The inhabitants excel in the arts more than in literature. The principal manufacture is that of silk. The maritime trade is carried on by lighters, which load and unload vessels at the village of Grao, near the mouth of the river. It is an ancient town, supposed to be the Valentia Edetanorum, of the Romans ; and was the capital of the kingdom of Valencia, which continued from 713 to 1238.

Valencia, or Tacarigua, lake, S. A., in Venezuela ; 14 miles from the sea, 53 S. by W. Caraccas. Lon. from 68. to 68. 40. W. Lat. 10. N. It is 37 miles long, and 11 broad. It is formed by the waters of 14 rivers, and is so deep as to be unfathomable at a small distance from the shore. Its shores are pleasant and beautiful, covered with an immense variety of trees, and thronged with different fowl. It contains 27 islands ; the land around it is fertile, but the air is unhealthy.

Valencia, t. S. A., in Caraccas ; 112 ESE. Venezuela, 77 SW. Caraccas. Lon. 68. 15. W. Lat. 10. 9. N. Pop. 8,000. It is situated a little to the west of lake Valencia. The streets are broad, and generally paved. The parish church and a handsome square, in which it stands, form the principal ornament of the city. It is well situated for trade, in a fertile tract of country.

Valenciana, celebrated silver mine, Mexico, in Guanaxuato. In this mine the great vein is 22 feet wide ; the chasm is entirely dry, and the mine easily wrought. The pits extend to the breadth of 4,900 feet, & the lowest is 1,640 feet deep. The mine employs upwards of 900 men in carrying the ore to the surface, 1,800 workmen in procuring and sorting the ore, and 400 women and children in carrying the minerals to the sorters. The total annual expense is upwards of £187,500 ; the nett profit from £82,500 to £123,759 per annum.

Valenciennes, city, France, principal place of a district, in North, situated on the Scheldt, which runs through the town in several places, and here becomes navigable ; 4½ posts E. Douay, 26 NNE. Paris. Lon. 3. 36. E. Lat. 50. 21. N. Pop. 16,918. H. 2,500. The form of the town is circular ; the streets narrow and crooked ; the houses generally old and ill built, many of them of wood ; the chief manufactures, lace of great fineness, cambric, gauze, and linen stuffs. The public square is handsome. It is supposed to have derived its name from the emperor Valentinian I., who, taken with the temperature of the climate, and charming situation of the place, laid the foundation of a town, about the year 367, endowing it with many privileges. It was taken by the allies, in 1793, after a severe siege, but was given up to the French, in 1794.

Valetta, (La.) city, Malta, capital of the island, on the east side. Lon. 14. 31. E. Lat. 35. 53. N. It consists of 5 parts, often considered as separate towns, 1st, La Valetta, or Citta Nuova, 2d, Citta Vittoriosa, 3d, Senylea, 4th, Barmola, and 5th, Cottonera. Pop. of the whole 36,000. H. 3,500. The situation is one of the finest in the world, and the appearance of the town from the sea is very beautiful. The streets are regular and well paved with lava, but till lately were deficient in cleanliness. The quays and other public places contain large, and in some respects elegant buildings. The city contains a cathedral, 20 churches, the former residence of the grand master, now occupied by the governor, town house, arsenal, college, hospitals, and 2 public libraries. The library of the knights is an old collection, comprising 40,000 volumes, chiefly of Greek, Latin, French, and Italian works. La Valetta, from its excellent harbour, is of great importance as a naval station, and a place of trade. On the S. side is one of the finest bays in the world, running about 2 miles inland, and so well protected on every side, that the largest ships may ride in it, in the worst of weather, almost without a cable. The entrance is scarcely $\frac{1}{4}$ m. wide, & is commanded on each side by very strong batteries. The fortifications of the town are of extraordinary strength, the whole exhibiting the wonders of art, as Gibraltar exhibits those of nature. The trade arises partly from its being an entrepot for the Barbary ports, & partly as an intermediate station for the Ionian islands and the Levant.

Valladolid, pr. Spain, in Leon, consisting of several scattered tracts, the two largest of which lie in the west and south-east of Leon. Pop. 187,400. Sq. m. 3,272. It is one of the poorest parts of Spain; it lies high; the soil is sandy and barren; the climate cold, moist, and uncomfortable; the chief support of the inhabitants is pasturage. The rivers are the Duero, Pisuerga, Esla, and Arlarcon.

Valladolid, (an. Pintia), city, Spain, in Leon, capital of the above province, on the Pisuerga, at the junction of the Esgueva, which flows through the town; 84 NNW. Madrid. Lon. 4. 47. W. Lat. 41. 42. N. Pop. about 20,000. Bp. see. It is situated in the midst of an extensive plain and contains a cathedral, 16 parish chh., 46 convents, 3 hospitals, and a university. The manufactures consist of silks, coarse woollens, and earthen ware. It has 6 gates, one large bridge, and several small ones. It was formerly much more important than at present. The streets are dirty, many of the houses in decay, and half finished edifices are the chief indications of its ancient splendour. Philip II. was a native of Valladolid, and made it the occasional residence of his court.

Valleys, (Four District of,) otherwise called The District of Pignerol, pr. Piedmont, bounded N. by Suza, W. by France, S. by Saluzzo, and E. by Carmagnola. The four valleys are those of Perousa, Lucerna, St. Martin, and Angrogna. The province is about 24 miles long, and from 8 to 11 broad. The principal towns are Pinerolo, Lucerna, Perousa, St. Martin, and Fenesrelle. The valleys are fertile in pasturage, and the mountains in fruit, particularly chesnuts. They are celebrated for the cruel persecution of the inhabitants, called Waldenses, on account of their religion, about the year 1655. The Waldenses are remarkable for being the first community in the west of Europe, that separated from the church of Rome.

Its situation is inconvenient for purposes of building, as it stands at the foot of a mountain, and so near to its cliffs that many houses are erected in the breaches and on the acclivities. It contains a parish church, and 2 convents, and is inhabited chiefly by whites, mestizoes, and mulattoes, who are engaged in the trade carried on with Peru and Europe. It is the port of St. Jago, the capital of Chili. It has an excellent harbour, every where free from rocks and shoals, except to the north-east, where there is a rock within a cable's length of the shore, and this is dangerous as it never appears above water. The ships from Peru all touch here, and take in wheat, tallow, Cordovan leather, cordage, and dried fruits.

Van Diemen's Land, isl. in the southern ocean, separated from New Holland by a navigable channel, called Bass's straits. Lon. 145. 31. to 148. 22. E. Lat. 40. 42. to 43. 43. S. It was first discovered by Tasman in 1633; visited by Furneaux in 1773; by Cook in 1777; since by various navigators. The island is mountainous, has generally an excellent soil, abounds in streams, and on the summits of many of the mountains are large lakes, some of which are sources of considerable rivers. Among the principal of these, are the Derwent, Huon, and Tamar. The island abounds in excellent harbours; the best are Derwent, Port Davy, Macquarie, Port Dalrymple, and Oyster bay. There is a great similarity between the animals and vegetables found here and in New-Holland. The climate is healthy, not subject to great extremes of heat and cold. The soil produces good crops of wheat, oats, barley, and other productions, found in countries at a similar distance north of the equator. Within a few years several colonies have been sent from the original establishment, made by the British at Port Jackson, to this island. In 1804, Hobart Town was founded, about 9 miles up the river Derwent; and another settlement, namely, Launceston, was founded about 30 miles from the mouth of Port Dalrymple, and 130 miles in a straight line from Hobart Town, which is the principal place. Pop. of the settlement in 1818, exclusive of the civil and military officers, 3,557; in 1821, 6,372. In 1821 there were 28,838 head of horned cattle, 182,468 sheep, 421 horses, and 10,683 acres of land in cultivation.

Shawneetown, W. 808. Lat. 38. 40. N. Pop. in 1822, 600. It is handsomely situated on ground elevated 60 feet above low water mark, and was laid out in Sept. 1819. The streets are 80 feet wide, intersecting each other at right angles, running N. & S., E. & W., and in the centre is a public square of 8 acres. It contains a state-house, which is a large building of wood, a state bank, a jail, a printing office, and about 200 buildings. It is supplied by 8 large springs of excellent water. Here is a bridge across the Kaskaskia. The river is navigable 8 months in the year for boats drawing 6 feet of water, from its mouth to the distance of 60 miles above Vandalia. The edifice of a public seminary is to be soon erected at this place, which has been endowed by congress with a township of land, consisting of 23,040 acres.

Venezuela, lately a republic, S. A., bounded N. by the Caribbean sea and the Atlantic, E. by Guiana, S. by Portuguese Guiana and New Grenada, and W. by New Grenada. Sq. m. according to Malte-Brunn, about 500,000. Pop. in 1804, according to Depons, 728,000. It comprised the following divisions, or provinces, Venezuela, or Caraccas, Varinas, Maracaybo, Cumana, Spanish Guiana, and Margarita island. This country, since 1786, has been styled by the Spaniards the Captain-generalship of Caraccas. In 1810, the inhabitants made a declaration of independence, and assumed the name of the Republic of Venezuela; and in 1819 the inhabitants of this country and New Grenada formed themselves into one government, by the name of the Republic of Colombia; and the country has been formed into new divisions. See Colombia and New Grenada.

This country has suffered greatly by the calamities of war. The total number of persons who perished in it, from 1810 to 1819, by the sword, famine, and earthquakes, has been estimated at 222,000.

The most remarkable natural feature of this country is the great river Orinoco. The lakes are Maracaybo and Valencia. The northern part is mountainous; the chain of the Andes traverses the whole country in the direction of its shores. In the southern parts, on the Orinoco and its branches, are immense plains. The climate in the plains is hot, and in some parts unhealthy. The productions are sugar, coffee, indigo, cotton, and tobacco. The plains on the Orinoco furnish extensive pastures, which feed numerous herds of cattle.

Venezuela, pr. S. America, in above country, bounded N. by Caribbean sea, E. by Cumana, S. by the Orinoco and Varinas, and W. by Varinas and Maracaybo. It was named Venezuela from the towns inhabited by the Indians, which were seen by the Spaniards on lake Maracaybo, having a resemblance to Venice. The soil is generally fertile, and yields in abundance the various products of the West Indies, besides some others, which those islands do not possess. Its most noted article of commerce is cocoa; others are vanilla, maize, indigo, cotton, sugar, tobacco, cochineal, dye-woods, drugs, &c. The principal rivers that flow into the Caribbean sea, are the Guiges, Tucuyo, Aroa, Yaracuy, and Tuy.

Totals 9,950 1,932,000

The inhabitants are mostly Italians and Catholics; about 42,000 are Germans, 4,000 Greeks, 2,700 Jews. See Italy, (Austrian.)

Venice, (an. Venetia), city, Aust. Italy, capital of a government and delegation of the same name, formerly the capital of a republic, near the northern extremity of the Adriatic, or gulf of Venice; 132 E. Milan, 216 N. Rome. Lon. 12. 21. E. Lat. 45. 26. N. Pop. in 1810, 116,340; in 1817, 109,779; by another statement in 1821, about 120,000. It is built on a collection of small islands, reputed 72 in number, separated from the main land by shallows from 3 to 6 feet deep. This position in the midst of waters gives it a singular appearance at a distance. Its domes and spires, its churches and public buildings, appear to the spectator, particularly in approaching by sea, to float on the surface of the waves. It is somewhat more than 2 miles long, $1\frac{1}{2}$ broad, and 6 in circuit. It is divided into 2 parts nearly equal, by a canal, more than 100 feet broad, winding through it in a serpentine form, and crossed by a bridge of a single arch, the celebrated Rialto, built of marble. Almost every part of the town is intersected by smaller canals navigated by gondolas. It is customary for fashionable families to keep a gondola, as in other towns they would keep a carriage. The breadth of the streets, as they are styled, is only 4, 5, or 6 feet; in many places still less. The only exception is in the street called Merceria, situated near the centre of the town, and containing shops of all kinds; and the breadth of this is only 10 or 12 feet. To ride either in a carriage or on horseback is wholly out of the question in Venice; accordingly the streets, or rather lanes, are paved not with round stones, but with flags, or marble slabs, having small sewers to carry off the filth. The only open place entitled to the name of square, is the Piazza di San Marco, an oblong 280 feet by 100, bordered by several handsome buildings. The other open spaces are in front of some of the churches, and at each end of the Rialto. The houses are mostly of brick, of 3 or 4 stories, but from the extreme narrowness of the streets they are gloomy, and in their interior they are deficient in convenience. Some of the larger houses are of marble. The aspect, however, of Venice is stately, whether we look to the public or private edifices; for though few of the buildings are in a pure style of architecture, or exhibit judicious decoration, the general effect is grand and imposing.

Venice contains a cathedral and numerous churches, some of them splendid and richly decorated; many convents, 8 synagogues; the former palace of the doges, a vast Gothic edifice; many other palaces or mansions of great families; 8 theatres, 23 hospitals, a large public library, an academy of the fine arts, an athenæum, or seminary forming a medium between a great school and a university, and other institutions. Printing is carried on here more extensively than in any other town in Italy; and books are supplied by wholesale to the Grecian islands, Constantinople, Spain, and Portugal.—The commercial greatness of Venice dates from the middle ages, and was at its greatest height in the 12th, 13th, and 14th centuries. The merchandise of India was then conveyed to Europe through the medium of the Levant, and Venice was superior to all other commercial cities in the Mediterranean; but since the discovery of the passage to India by the Cape of Good Hope its trade gradually diminished, and it is at present inferior to that of Trieste. The harbour is spacious and commodious, but its approach is intricate.—Venice was founded in 421. The government was at first democratic, but became, in 1247, a settled aristocracy; the chief officer, or head of the executive power, bore the title of doge. It was for some time the most commercial city in the world, and public banks were first used here. In 1797, Venice and the Venetian States were annexed to Austria; in 1805 they were incorporated with the French kingdom of Italy, but restored to Austria in 1814.

Vera Cruz, intendency, Mexico, extending along the gulf of Mexico, about 210 leagues in length, only from 25 to 28 in breadth, bounded E. and NE. by the gulf of Mexico, SE. by Guatimala, S. by Oaxaca, W. by Puebla, Mexico, and San Luis Potosi, and N. by New Santander. Pop. 156,000. Sq. leagues 4,141. There are few countries where the traveller is more struck with the assemblage of opposite climates, than in this province. The eastern part along the gulf of Mexico, consists of plains, which are exceedingly hot and unhealthy; the western part forms the declivity of the Cordilleras of Anahuac. In the space of a day the inhabitants descend from the regions of eternal snow, to plains where the most suffocating heat prevails. The different tribes of vegetables rise by strata, as it were, above each other in admirable order. This intendency contains the mountain of Popocatepetl, the most elevated in Mexico, Cofre de Perote, and the volcanoes Orizaba and Taxtla.

Vera Cruz, s-p. Mexico, capital of the above intendency, on the gulf of Mexico; 130 E. by N. Puebla, 200 E. by S. Mexico. Lon. 96. 9. W. Lat. 19. 12. N. Pop. 16,000. It fronts the sea in a semicircle, and is enclosed with a simple wall or parapet, 6 feet high, and 3 feet broad, surmounted by a wooden palisade in great decay. Opposite to the town, 400 fathoms distant, is a small island, on which stands the castle of St. Juan d'Ulloa, which is fortified by 300 pieces of cannon. About 100 merchant vessels may anchor here, in from 4 to 10 fathoms; but the northern winds are terrible and often drive vessels on shore. On the shore to the SE. and NW. are 2 redoubts to defend the port, which is not commodious, being merely a bad anchorage among shallows. Vera Cruz is the great seaport of Mexico, and the place through which almost all the trade between that country & Spain has been carried on. It is not only the centre of European and West Indian commerce, but receives also great quantities of East Indian produce, by way of Acapulco, from the Philippine islands. Humboldt estimates the annual value of exports in time of peace, at $21,000,000; imports at $15,000,000. Of the exports he states the value of gold and silver at $17,000,000; cochineal at $2,400,000; sugar $1,300,000; flour $300,000.

The town is situated on arid plain, without running water, and on which, the north winds, which blow with dreadful impetuosity, from October to April, have formed hills of moving sand, from 26 to 38 feet high, which change their form and situation every year. The city is handsomely and regularly built, the streets broad and straight, but its climate is hot and unhealthy, and extremely subject to the yellow fever. This dreadful distemper generally commences its ravages when the mean temperature rises to 75. In Dec., Jan., and Feb., when the heat remains below this limit, it generally disappears. The buildings are all constructed from materials drawn from the bottom of the ocean, the strong habitations of the madrepores, for no rock is to be found in the environs, though freestone has now begun to be brought from Campeachy. The water in the town is very bad. A stone aqueduct for conducting water to the town from the river Xamapa, has been partially executed. The ascent from the city, into the interior, which is a plain elevated nearly 8,000 feet above the level of the ocean, being through difficult and narrow roads, the merchants of Vera Cruz, have lately set on foot the construction of a magnificent causeway to be continued as far as the city of Mexico.—The regular population, without including the militia or seafaring people, is 16,000, but upon the arrival of a flotilla, from Old Spain, a fair is opened which lasts many weeks, and there is a great resort of strangers.

Vera Cruz, port in the bay of St. Philip and St. Jago, in Terra Australis del Espiritu Santo, discovered by Quiros in 1606, and, according to him, capable of containing 1,000 ships, with clear soundings of black sand, and water from 4 feet to 40 fathom.

Towns. Montpelier is the seat of government. The other most considerable towns are Burlington, Windsor, Middlebury, and Brattleborough. There are 147 townships.

Education. There are two colleges in Vermont, 1 at Burlington and the other at Middlebury; a military and scientific academy at Norwich, and academies have been established at Addison, Arlington, Bennington, Brandon, Burlington, Castleton, Cavendish, Chester, Fairfield, Middlebury, Montpelier, Peacham, Randolph, Royalton, Shaftsbury, Shoreham, St. Albans, and Windsor. Common schools are supported throughout the state.

Religion. The principal denominations of Christians in Vermont, are Congregationalists, who had, in 1820, 172 congregations with 75 ordained ministers; and Baptists, who had in 1817, 112 congregations. There are also some Methodists, Episcopalians, Friends, Universalists, &c.

Government. The legislative power is vested in a house of representatives. Every town has the right to send one representative. The executive power is vested in a governor, lieutenant governor, and 12 counsellors. All these officers, together with the representatives, are chosen annually on the first Tuesday in September. The legislature meets on the 2d Thursday in October. Judges and other officers are appointed for one year.

Rivers. The west bank of Connecticut river forms the eastern boundary of Vermont. The most considerable rivers within the state, are Lamoile, Onion, Otter creek, Misisque, Deerfield, White, Black, and Pasumpsic.

Face of the country and mountains. The face of the country is generally uneven, and a great part of it is mountainous. The Green mountains (in French verd mont), from which the state takes its name, extend through the whole length of the state nearly N. and S., and are from 10 to 15 miles wide, intersected by valleys. They lie principally on the east side of Bennington, Rutland, and Addison counties. In Chittenden county they appear to divide, the highest chain continuing a north course through Chittenden county, while the height of land, so called from its not being broken through by any river, owing to its uniform elevation, strikes off to the northeast as far as Cabot. The western range presents much the loftiest summits, but has inequalities which afford a passage for Onion and Lamoile rivers. The highest summits of the Green mountains in Vermont, are Killington Peak, Camel's Rump, and Mansfield mountains. Ascutney is a noted mountain on the E. side of the state, south of Windsor.

Soil. A large proportion of the soil in this state is fertile, and fitted to the various purposes of agriculture. It is generally deep, of a dark colour, rich, moist, warm, loamy, and seldom parched with drought. The low lands on the interval are thought the best; bordering on these is usually a strip 1 or 2 m. wide, comparatively poor; beyond which the land recovers a fertility, nearly equal to that on the rivers. Much of the land among the Green mountains is excellent for grazing, and here are found many fine farms.

Productions. Wheat is extensively cultivated, particularly on the west side of the mountains. Barley, rye, oats, peas, and flax flourish in all parts of the state. Corn thrives best on the intervals, but is also raised in abundance on the uplands. Large quantities of maple sugar are made in Vermont for home consumption, and some for exportation. The exports of Vermont consist of pot and pearl ashes, beef, pork, butter, cheese, flax, live cattle, &c. The trade is chiefly with Boston, Hartford, New York, and Montreal.

Minerals, &c. Iron ore of good quality is found in several places. There are quarries of marble at Middlebury, Bennington, Arlington, Shaftsbury, Pittsford, and Swanton. Porcelain earth is found at Monkton. There are also some lead and copperas mines.—There are 12 paper mills in the state. Among the most considerable manufacturing towns, are Middlebury, Bennington, Brattleborough, Burlington and Montpelier.

Climate. The climate is healthy, but subject to great extremes of heat and cold. Winter in its severity commences about the first of December, and continues to about the middle of March. During this season the weather is generally fair, and the cold more uniform and steady than in the other New England states.

Verona, delegation, Austrian Italy, in the government of Venice; watered by the Adige, and though partly mountainous, having an agreeable climate and a fertile soil. The productions are corn, wine, oil, flax, and silk; in the mountains beautiful marble. Pop. 285,000. Sq. m. 1,330.

Verona, city, Aust Italy, capital of the above delegation, formerly capital of a district, called the Veronese, on the Adige; 18 NNE. Mantua, 60 W. Venice. Lon. 11. 1. E. Lat. 45. 26. N. Pop. in 1810, 41,508. H. 10,000. Bp. see. It has a pleasant and picturesque situation, partly on a declivity and partly on the border of a large plain. The Adige flows through it in a rapid full stream, dividing it into two unequal parts, and is crossed by four stone bridges. The form of the city is irregular, its circuit about 6 miles. It retains its old fortification of a moat and earthen mound, and has two castles on high ground, with a third on the plain. The interior of the city does not correspond with the beauty of its position, most of the streets being narrow and dirty; several, however, are spacious and well paved. The houses are in an antique style, but of good appearance from the quantity of marble employed in their construction. It contains a Gothic cathedral, 48 churches, 41 convents, 18 hospitals, a town house, a museum, a gymnasium, a lyceum, a public library, an academy of painting, also the Academia Philharmonica and the Philoli, both remarkable for a number of ancient monuments. Some of the chh. are noted for their paintings, others for their architecture. The town house has on the outside niches, containing busts of the distinguished natives of Verona—Pliny the elder, Catullus, Marcus Æmilius, Cornelius Nepos, and Vitruvius. Other distinguished natives are Maffei, Fracastorius, and Paolo Veronese.

The most interesting monument of Verona, and one of the most remarkable remains of Roman architecture now existing, is the amphitheatre. The arena in the centre, and of oval form, is 220 feet by 130. The seats rise in 45 successive ranges from the arena, capable of containing about 22,000 spectators; the outward circumference of the amphitheatre 1,290 feet. The seats, as well as the different passages, the stair cases & galleries, remain entire; the whole consisting of vast blocks of marble. The chief manufacture of Verona is silk.—A congress of the principal powers of Europe, was held here in 1822.

Versailles, city, France, capital of Seine-and-Oise; 12 W. by S. Paris. Lon. 2. 7. E. Lat. 48. 48. N. Pop. 27,574. H. 1,959. Bp. see. The streets are wider than those of Paris, and cross each other at right angles. The town contains a cathedral, 8 churches, a high school, a public library of 40,000 volumes, a botanic garden, & cabinet of natural history, and has a manufacture of fire arms, and also some other manufactures. In 1666, Versailles was little more than a village, with a hunting lodge for the royal family, when Louis XIV., pleased with the situation, began to erect a splendid palace here, which it required 12 years to build. No expense was spared by him, or his successors, to render it the most splendid royal residence in Europe. It is situated on rising ground, and is approached by 3 great avenues, each lined with double rows of trees. The front & wings are built of polished stone, ornamented with statues; the interior is equally grand, the great hall being above 22 feet long. This palace has been uninhabited since 1789.—Versailles having from its situation but little water, it was necessary to bring a supply from a distance by machinery. This was executed on a grand scale, and no city or royal residence can boast a greater display of reservoirs, fountains, and canals. The spacious park and gardens, situated behind the palace, contain parterres, jets d'eau, cascades, and thickets in pleasant variety; also a magnificent orangery.

Vesuvius, volcanic mountain, Naples; 7 SSE. Naples. It is celebrated for its eruptions, and rises in a gentle swell from the bay of Naples to the height of 3,731 feet. The view from the summit is very beautiful, including Naples, with its bay, islands, and promontories, as well as the delightful scenery of the Campagna Felice. But the most interesting objects in this view are the different portions of the mountain itself; the upper part torn by a series of convulsions, and strewn with its own fragments; the next part in the descent mixed with dried lava, extending in wide, black lines over its surface; while the lower part, as if danger were far remote, is covered with villages & country seats, fields of maize, groves of trees, and other luxuriant productions, all displaying the great fertility given by the ashes to the soil. The summit is in the form of a cone; steep, difficult of ascent, from the looseness of the materials.

The crater is nearly $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. in circuit, and 350 feet deep. About 30 eruptions are on record. One, which happened in the 79th year of the Christian era, overwhelmed the cities of Herculaneum and Pompeii, when the elder Pliny lost his life. The principal eruptions of modern times, which have been recorded, happened in the years 1538, 1631, 1707, 1717, 1737, 1760, 1761, 1766, 1767, 1779, 1786, and 1794, also recent ones in 1818, 1819, and 1822; of these, the first in 79, in 1631, and in 1794, appear to have been the most tremendous. In the year 1794, the mischief was considerable; the lava covered, and totally destroyed, 5,000 acres of rich vineyards and cultivated land, and drove the inhabitants of Torre del Greco from the town, most of the houses being either buried, or so injured, as to be uninhabitable; the damage done in the vineyards by the ashes likewise was immense.

Vevay, p-t. & cap. Switzerland co. Indiana, on the Ohio, 8 miles above the mouth of the Kentucky, about 70 miles by water below Cincinnati, 75 above the falls of the Ohio, 65 NW. Lexington, W. 562. It is handsomely situated, was laid out in 1813, by John F. Daffour, and contained, in 1821, a brick court house, a stone jail, a brick market house, a printing office, a circulating library, an academy, a branch of the Indiana bank, upwards of 100 dwelling houses, a part of them of brick, a part framed, and a part of logs, and about 600 inhabitants. Two meeting houses, one for Presbyterians, & one for Baptists, were about to be erected. The landing in front of the town is safe and commodious. A state road is established from this town to Indianapolis. In the immediate vicinity of this place are vineyards, planted by some emigrants from Pays de Vaud, in Switzerland,

Vienna, (in German Wien,) city and capital of the Austrian empire, in Lower Austria, or Land below the Ens, on the south bank of the Danube, at the junction of the two small rivers Wien and Alser; 175 S. Prague, 380 NNE. Rome, 660 ESE. London. Lon. 16. 23. E. Lat. 48. 13. N. Pop. in 1811, 263,944; in 1821, about 270,000. H. 7,132. It is situated on a plain, and is subject to inundation, particularly by the Wien. The environs are fertile and picturesque; to the north are the islands of the Danube; to the west the lofty summit of the Kahlenberg; to the south, mountains covered with vineyards and extensive forests; and to the east, vast plains. The original city is of circular form, surrounded with walls, about 3 miles in circuit, and contains about 1,400 houses, and about 60,000 inhabitants. Between this and the suburbs is an open space, a little more than $\frac{1}{2}$ m. wide. The suburbs were long a succession of scattered villages, but are now so connected as to form a continuous whole, surrounded on the out side by a wall embracing a circuit of 12 miles. The houses in the city are generally 6 or 7 stories high, built of brick, the roofs of slate; the streets narrow, most of them paved. In the suburbs the streets are wider, the houses not so high, and many of the buildings good. There is, however, in these quarters, a most heterogeneous mixture of family mansions, cottages, workshops, & manufactories. The streets are all well lighted at night.

Vienna has 8 squares, small and irregular; the imperial palace, a vast irregular edifice, containing very valuable collections; a riding academy, one of the largest in Europe; an assembly room, called the hall of Apollo, capable of containing 10,000 people; the Belvidere, a palace built by prince Eugene; the imperial mews, capable of containing more than 400 horses; the arsenal, an immense collection of arms; 10 hospitals, one of which receives 10,000 patients annually; 46 Cath. chh., of which 29 are parish churches; 2 Greek chh., 1 Ref., 1 Luth., 1 united Greek, 1 synagogue; 14 monasteries, and 3 nunneries. The cathedral, dedicated to St. Stephen, is a vast Gothic edifice, which dates from 1270, and has a tower 452 feet in height. The university dates from 1267, consists of 4 faculties, and has a library of 100,000 volumes, a botanic garden, one of the most eminent in Europe, an anatomical theatre, a cabinet of natural history, 54 regular professors, and 18 assistants. The number of students, in 1817, was 357. As a medical school, this much excels any other in Germany. The city contains 3 gymnasias, 50 libraries, an academy of the fine arts, and various other institutions. The imperial library is said to contain 300,000 printed volumes, 70,000 tracts and dissertations, 15,000 MSS., and 30,000 engravings. The imperial collection of medals and coins is reckoned the most complete in Europe. The mineralogical collection consists of nearly 100,000 specimens. The imperial collection of paintings consists of about 1,400 pictures. There are also very large private collections of the fine arts. The business of printing and book-selling is on a scale far inferior to London or Paris: the number of printing offices is below 25, that of booksellers below 30. There is scarcely a capital in Europe that can boast of so many titled personages among its permanent inhabitants; there are about 20 princes, 70 counts, and 50 barons.

Vienna is the centre of the trade of Austria, as London is of that of England; yet the number of wholesale mercantile houses hardly exceeds 200. The roads leading to the city are few compared with the approaches to London or Paris. The manufactures, if not very extensive in any particular department, are of great variety. The principal amusements are the theatres, which are 5 in number, all below mediocrity, and the fine public walks. Of these the Prater is the most frequented. It is an immense park, belonging to the court, but thrown open to the public, consisting of a thick forest of oaks, elms, and chesnuts, with a variety of walks and lawns. For fuel the inhabitants use partly wood, and partly coals and turf. The water is not good. The air is often foggy, and the climate unhealthy. It is said that 1 in 20 dies annually, and that the proportion of deaths exceeds that of births. Vienna, under the name of Vindobona, was long the head quarters of a Roman legion.

Vienne, t. France, principal place of a district, in Isere; 10 posts N. Valence, 71 SSE. Paris. Lon. 4.54. E. Lat. 45.33. N. Pop. 10,362. H. 1,500. It contains a fine Gothic cathedral, 14 chh., a high school, and a museum, and has various manufactures. It is situated on the left side of the Rhone, over which was formerly a stone bridge, built in the year 1265, now destroyed. A Roman colony was established here & called Vienna Allobrogum, and there are still to be seen various remains of its ancient importance, as the ruins of a temple, a theatre, an amphitheatre, aqueducts, &c. In the 5th century it was taken by the Burgundians, and the kings made it their place of residence. In the ninth century it was the capital of the kingdom of Provence. It was afterwards erected into an archbishopric, and became the capital of a province called Viennois. In 1311, a council was held here by order of Pope Clement V.

Villa Rica, t. Brazil, capital of the province of Minas Geraes; 150 N. Rio Janeiro. Lon. 45. 50. W. Lat. 20. 26. S. Pop. 20,000. It is situated on the side of a large mountain connected with others, forming an immense chain. Most of the streets range in steps, as it were, from the base to the summit, and are crossed by others, which lead up the acclivity. It owes its origin to the rage for discovering gold mines, and was commenced about 1711. A government house, a mint, and a depot of arms were built. The mines were in the height of their prosperity between the years 1730 and 1750, and were the source of immense wealth. They afterwards gradually declined, and Villa Rica now retains but little of its former splendour. Its inhabitants, with the exception of the shopkeepers, are void of employment. The town is of considerable extent, but by no means so well peopled, as when the mines were rich. It is admirably supplied with water, which is conducted to almost every house. The gardens here are laid out with great taste. The climate is delightful; the temperature, on account of its elevated site, is temperate. The thermometer never rises above 82 deg. in the shade, & rarely falls below 48 deg.—The country around is fertile, but cultivation is much neglected.

Louisville, 140 E. St. Louis, 150 NE. Kaskaskia, W. 726. Lon. 88. 23. W. Lat. 40. 39. N. Pop. in 1810, 883. It contains a court house, a jail, a land office, a bank, an academy, a library of 700 volumes, a Roman Catholic chapel, and 2 printing offices, from each of which is issued a weekly newspaper. The plan of the town is handsomely designed; the streets are wide and cross each other at right angles. It contained, in 1818, about 150 dwelling houses, some of which are built in a good style, but the most of them are small and scattering. Every house is furnished with a garden. This town has considerable trade in furs and peltry. Vincennes was first settled by the French from Lower Canada in 1730. Buried in the recesses of the wilderness, remote from civilized society, and having constant intercourse with the Indians, the inhabitants approximated in their manners and appearance to their savage neighbours. They have, however, greatly improved since their adoption into the American family.

Virgin Islands, a cluster of islands in the West-Indies, situated to the E. of Porto-Rico. They are upwards of 20 in number, but for the most part desert and barren, and extend 60 miles in length, and upwards of 36 in breadth: but they are every way dangerous to navigators, though there is a basin in the midst of them of 18 or 20 miles in length, and 9 or 12 in breadth, in which ships may anchor, and be sheltered and landlocked from all winds, and called The Bay of Sir Francis Drake, from his having passed through them to St. Domingo. The English and Danes divide most of them; but the Spaniards claim those near Porto Rico. The island of Virgin Gorda, on which depend Anegada, Nicker, Prickly Pear, and Mosquito islands, Cammanoes, Dog Islands, the Fallen City, with the Round Rock, Ginger, Cooper's, Salt Island, Peter's Island, and Dead Chest, belong to the English; and they possess also Tortola, on which depend Jost, Van Dyke's, Little Van Dyke's, Guano, Beef, and Thatch islands. To the Danes belong St. Thomas's island, on which Brass, Little Saba, Buck island, Great and Little St. James, and Bird island are dependent, with St. John, to which belong Lavango, Cam, & Witch islands: and they have also Santa island, or St. Croix. These islands lie at about Lat. 18. 20. N.

Towns. Richmond is the metropolis of the state. The other most considerable towns are Norfolk, Petersburg, Lynchburg, Fredericksburg, Winchester, Portsmouth, Williamsburg, Staunton, and Wheeling.

Education. A university has been recently established at Charlottesville. There are 3 colleges, William and Mary College, at Williamsburg, Washington College, at Lexington, and Hampden Sidney College in Prince Edward county. There are academies at Abingdon, Clarksburg, Danville, Lynchburg, New London, Martinsburg, Norfolk, Petersburg, Staunton, Winchester, Dinwiddie C. H., Gloucester C. H., near Halifax C. H., in Albemarle co., also Potomac Academy, in Prince-George co., Rappahannock Academy in Caroline co., and Rum-ford Academy in King William co. The literary fund of Virginia, which consists of monies received from the United States, for military expenses, during the late war, and fines, penalties, forfeitures, escheats, &c., amounted in 1818, to $1,114,159, the interest of which according to the president and directors, in their report to the General Assembly, would be $61,534,49 per annum. Of this sum $45,000 are appropriated, by the act of the legislature, to the support of primary schools, and $15,000 to the university.

Religion. The denominations of Christians in Virginia, are Baptists, who according to the Baptist report, in 1817, had 314 congregations; Presbyterians, who had, in 1818, 41 ordained ministers, and several licentiates; Episcopalians, who had, in 1817, 34 ministers; Friends, who had, in 1812, 33 meetings. There are also many Methodists, some Lutherans, Roman Catholics, Jews, &c.

Government. The legislature is composed of a senate and house of representatives. The senate consists of 24 members, chosen for 4 years, by districts, one fourth being chosen every year. The representatives are chosen annually, 2 from each county, and one from several cities and boroughs. The governor is chosen annually by a joint ballot of both houses, and can hold the office but 3 years in 7.

Rivers. The principal rivers are the Potomac, Shenandoah, Rappahannock, Mattaponi, Pamunky, York, James, Rivanna, Appomattox, Elizabeth, Nottaway, Meherrin, Staunton, Kenawha, Ohio, Sandy, Monongahela, and Cheat.

Productions. The staple productions of Virginia are wheat and tobacco. The exports of the state, for the year ending Sept. 30, 1817, amounted to $5,621,442; and the value of the manufactures, in 1810, was estimated at $15,263,473.

Face of the country and soil. The state of Virginia may be divided into four zones, essentially differing from one another. The first extending from the sea coast to the termination of tide at Fredericksburg, Richmond, &c., is low and flat, sometimes fenny, sometimes sandy, and on the margin of rivers composed of a rich loam covered with a luxuriant and even rank vegetation. This part is unhealthy in the months of August, September, and October.

The next division extends from the head of tide water to the Blue Ridge. The surface near the tide water is level; higher up the rivers it becomes swelling; and near the mountains it is often abrupt and broken. The soil is divided into sections of very unequal quality, parallel to each other, and extending throughout the state. The parallel of Chesterfield, Henrico, Hanover, &c. is a thin, sandy, and, except on the rivers, and unproductive soil. That of Goochland, Cumberland, Prince Edward, Halifax, &c., is generally fertile. Fluvanna, Buckingham, Campbell, Pittsylvania, again, are poor; and Culpeper, Orange, Albermarle, Bedford, &c., a rich, though frequently a stony, broken soil, on a substratum of tenacious and red coloured clay. The population of this section, especially near the mountains, is more robust and healthy, than that of any other part of the state. The scenery of the upper part is highly picturesque and romantic. There is a vein of limestone, running through Albermarle, Orange, &c. Pit coal of a good quality is found within 20 miles above Richmond, on James river.

The third division is the valley between the Blue Ridge, and North and Alleghany mountains; a valley which extends, with little interruption, from the Potomac, across the state, to N. Carolina and Tennessee, narrower, but of greater length than either the preceding divisions. The soil is a mould formed on a bed of limestone. The surface of the valley is sometimes broken by sharp and solitary mountains detached from the general chain, the sides of which, nearly bare, or but thinly covered with blasted pines, form disagreeable objects in the landscape. The bed of the valley is fertile, producing good crops of Indian corn, wheat, rye, oats, buck wheat, hemp, flax, timothy, and clover. The farms are smaller than in the lower parts of Virginia, and the cultivation is better. Here are few slaves.—This valley has inexhaustible mines of excellent iron ore. Chalk is found in Botetourt county.

The fourth division extends from the Alleghany mountains to the river Ohio; a country wild and broken, in some parts fertile, but generally lean or barren: but having inexhaustible mines of iron, lead, coal, salt, &c.

Minerals. There are many mineral springs in Virginia. The hot and warm springs of Bath county, the sweet springs of Monroe co., the sulphur springs of Greenbrier and of Montgomery cos., and the baths of Berkley county, are much frequented.—The most remarkable curiosities are the Natural Bridge, the passage of the Potomac at Harper's Ferry, the cataract of Falling Spring, and several caves.

Walachia, pr. in the north of Eu. Turkey, part of ancient Dacia; bounded N. by Transylvania, NE. by Moldavia, S. by the Danube, W. by Servia, & NW. by Hungary. Lat. from 44. to 45. 58. N.; 250 m. long from E. to W., about 160, on an average, broad. Sq. m. computed from 23,500 to 28,000. Population stated by Leichtenstern, at 960,000; by Cannabich, at 900,000, by others at less than 800,000. The population is composed of Walachians, Bulgarians, Rascians, and Gipsies; the last computed at about 100,000. The religion is the Greek church. The chief towns are Bucharest, the capital, Brahilow, Giorgiev, and Tergovitz; the rivers are the Danube, Aluta, Dumbowitza, Jalomitza, and Sereth.

The northern part is mountainous; the Carpathians forming its frontier, and sending out a number of branches; the middle and southern parts less uneven, consisting partly of valleys and plains, pleasant and fertile. With regard to soil few countries are more favoured by nature, but cultivation is exceedingly backward. The agricultural products are chiefly wheat, millet, maize, beans, & pease; vines and fruits abound; but the chief wealth of the country arises from its pasture. The exports are horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, wool, leather, tallow, butter, wax, honey, flax, hemp, salt, and saltpetre. Of manufactures Walachia is almost destitute. The sciences are little known, and education is very backward; the principal seminary is at Bucharest. Walachia was subjected to the Turks in the beginning of the 15th century, since which it has been in a state of half subjection to the Porte and to Austria; and since the beginning of the present century, Russia has interfered to insure the inhabitants the enjoyment of a share of independence. The government is not exercised directly by the Porte, but by a hospodar, or prince, who is generally of a Greek family of rank, and always of the Greek religion. He obtains his appointment by purchase, and generally keeps it by paying to the Turkish government an annual tribute of about £80,000 sterling. He is liable to be deposed at the will of the Ottoman court, and the precarious tenure of his power and the almost total want of law in this country, is the cause of heavy exactions.

Walachia, (Little), district, Sclavonia, extending from the town of Pogeek to the borders of Croatia; generally level and fertile; its pastures contain great numbers of cattle, but there is a large proportion of forest land. It takes its name from being settled long since by a colony of Walachians.

Waldenses, a people inhabiting a sequestered district of Piedmont, called the Four Valleys. They are remarkable for having been the first community in the west of Europe, that separated from the church of Rome, for their attachment to their religious principles, and for the various persecutions and hardships, which they have endured. They still exist as a distinct community, inhabiting three of the Four Valleys, Perousa, Lucerna, and St. Martin; Agrogna no longer belonging to the Waldenses. See Valleys, (Four.) They comprise 13 parishes, and are very poor. While Piedmont formed a part of the French empire, they were exempted from privations and persecutions on account of their religion; but since the re-establishment of the Sardinian monarchy, they have been again subjected to great hardships.

The general aspect of Wales is bold and romantic, consisting of almost continued ranges of mountains and impending crags, intersected by numerous deep ravines, with extensive valleys, and affording a great variety of views of mountain scenery. Some of the principal mountains are Snowdon, Corned Llewellyn, Arran Towddy, Cader Idris, and Plinlimmon. Among the mountains are numerous lakes, from which issue a profusion of streams, that meander through the country. The principal rivers are the Severn, Wye, Conway, Towy, & Dee. The climate differs from that of England in the same parallels, assimilating more with the northern parts of the island. From the reports to the board of agriculture, it appears, that of the 5,206,900 acres of land contained in Wales, 900,000 are subject to the plough, 2,500,000 under pasturage, and 1,700,000 in a state of waste. The agriculture of Wales is very far behind that of England, and the roads throughout the country were, till lately, very indifferent. The mineral productions are very abundant, & form an inexhaustible source of wealth. They consist of iron, silver, gold, lead, &c. The language, manners, and customs of the Welsh, are widely different from those of the English.

Wales, (New), name given to a part of N. A., situated SE. & SW. of Hudson's bay, & divided into North and South; the former name is lost in the more general term of Labrador. New South Wales is situated NW. of Canada, and extends along the south borders of Hudson's bay, 450 miles, from Lon. 85. to 90. W. Lat. 54. to 58. N.

Wales, (New South), a name given to the eastern part of New Holland, discovered, in 1770, by captain Cook, who sailed along the coast, a course, if laid down in a straight line, of no less than 27 degrees of latitude, amounting to near 2,000 miles. The country possesses every variety of soil, from sandy heath & cold, hungry clay, to the fertile loam & deep vegetable mould. For the distance of 5 or 6 miles from the coast, the land is generally extremely barren, being sandy and rocky. Beyond this barren girdle, the soil improves, & the country is covered with stately trees and a thick forest. Some of the principal rivers, that have been discovered, are the Hawkesbury, Macquarrie, Nepean, and Shoal Haven rivers. The soil on these rivers is of great fertility. An extensive range, called Blue mountains, traverses the country at a considerable distance from the coast. To the west of the range, is a country of vast extent, and great diversity of soil and climate. In this country is the British colony settled about Port Jackson or Botany bay. The principal towns are Sydney, the capital, Paramatta, Hawkesbury, Windsor, Newcastle, and Liverpool. Connected with this settlement is one on Van Dieman's land. See Botany Bay, Holland, (New), Sydney, and Van Dieman's Land.

The land is high and extremely fertile, and in most parts supplied with a heavy growth of cotton wood, ash, & sweet willow. But the chief wealth of the island consists in the numerous ponds in the interior, abounding with the common arrow head, (sagittaria sagittifolia), to the root of which is attached a bulb, growing beneath it in the mud. This bulb, to which the Indians give the name of wapatoo, is the great article of food, & almost the staple article of commerce on the Columbia. It is never out of season, so that at all times of the year the valley is frequented by the neighbouring Indians, who come to gather it. It is collected chiefly by the women, who take a light canoe in a pond, where the water is as high as the breast, and by means of their toes, separate the root from the bulb, which, on being freed from the mud, rises immediately to the surface of the water, and is thrown into the canoe. This plant is found through the whole extent of the Columbia valley, but does not grow further eastward.

Warrington, t. Eng., in Lancashire, on the N. bank of the Mersey; 18 E. Liverpool, 183 NNW. London. Pop. 11,738. It consists of 4 principal streets with other smaller ones; some of them open, having handsome modern buildings, others narrow & containing mean houses. It contains a church, a chapel of ease, houses of worship for Catholics, Presbyterians, Baptists, Quakers, and Methodists, a good free school, and an academy for the education of youth, particularly in trade and merchandise. The principal trade consists in the manufacture and sale of sail cloth; also coarse linens, checks, and excellent malt; also pin-making, glass-making, and iron founding. Vessels of 70 or 80 tons come up to Bank-Quay, a little below the town. Market on Wednesday.—An academy for dissenters was instituted here some years ago, but failing to prosper, it was discontinued.

Warsaw, p-t. Genesee co. N. Y.; 20 S. Batavia, 260 W. Albany, W. 392. Pop. 1,658.

Warsaw, city, Poland, capital of the kingdom, formerly capital of the whole country of Poland, on the west bank of the Vistula; 160 S. Konigsberg, 300 E. Berlin. Lon. 20. 3. E. Lat. 52. 14. N. Pop. in 1787, 96,143; in 1801, 63,359; in 1818, 76,000: Jews 10,000. The population has of late been on the increase. Warsaw has a pleasant situation, not very elevated, yet sufficiently so to be secure against the overflowings of the Vistula. It is an open town, having neither gates nor walls; covers a great extent of ground, being between 3 and 4 miles long, including its 4 suburbs, and between 2 and 3 broad; but this extent includes large spaces occupied by gardens. The Vistula is here quite as wide as the Thames at London, but not so deep, and there is a floating bridge across it 1,500 feet in length.

The city, formerly but little better than a collection of cottages, received considerable improvements from its Saxon sovereigns of the last century. Still it is an irregular and unpleasant place, exhibiting a singular contrast of ostentation and poverty, having in a few quarters mansions of such splendour as to be entitled to the name of palaces; in others a succession of miserable hovels. The streets were formerly wholly without pavements, and exceedingly filthy, but several of them are now paved, kept clean, and well lighted. The town is divided into Old and New, exclusive of the 4 suburbs, one of which, Praga, lies on the east bank of the river. The Old town, with the exception of a few public edifices, is miserably built, but there is a greater proportion of good houses in the New town and suburbs. The largest edifice is the palace of the kings of the house of Saxony, now the residence of the viceroy, who represents the emperor of Russia. The city is now in an improving state, and increasing in population and trade. It contains 39 chh., 6 hospitals, a library, a military academy, a gymnasium, a lyceum, and a university founded in 1816, consisting of 5 faculties, theology, jurisprudence, political economy, philosophy, and the fine arts. The state of literature is indicated by the fact that it contains only 6 booksellers.—Its situation for an inland town is favourable for trade; the Vistula is navigable to a great extent upwards as well as downwards. It has manufactures of woollen stuffs, soap, tobacco, gold and silver wire, carriages, harness, and carpets. Since 1817, two great annual fairs have been established. In 1566 the diet of Poland was transferred from Cracow, the old capital of Poland, to Warsaw.

Warwick, p-t. Kent co. R. I., on W. side of Narraganset bay; 10 S. Providence. P. 3,443. It is a good agricultural township, and one of the most considerable for manufactures in Rhode Island. The north-west part is watered by the Pawtuxet, and on Narraganset bay are several good harbours, the most considerable of which is that of Apponaug; about a mile from it is a village containing a Baptist meeting house, a bank, an academy, and upwards of 50 dwelling houses. Warwick contains 15 cotton and 2 woollen manufactories. Ten vessels are owned here. The Indian name of Warwick was Shawomet, or Mishawomet.—Gen. Nathaniel Greene was born here in 1741.

Drum rock, about a mile from the village of Apponaug, is regarded as a great curiosity. It is a huge rock so exactly balanced, upon another, that a boy 14 years of age, may put it in motion; and the sound, somewhat resembling that of a drum, though louder, may be heard, in a still evening, at a distance of 6 or 8 m.

It is situated on a rocky hill; the streets meet in the centre on an eminence; the principal one conspicuous for neatness. It was nearly destroyed by fire in 1694, and to this it owes its regularity. It sends 2 members to parliament, and has considerable trade and manufactures, and a number of elegant public buildings. It is celebrated for its castle, which is one of the noblest structures of the kind remaining in England, and is approached by a broad winding path, cut through solid rock. The suite of apartments extend in a right line 333 feet, and are finished in a magnificent style. Though it is populous, it has but 2 parish churches; it had once 6, and as many monasteries. The markets are on Wednesday and Saturday.

It is a flourishing town, and contains a court house, a jail, 2 banks, 2 printing offices, a college, a very large steam flour mill, and other public buildings and manufacturing establishments. It is situated in a fertile, well cultivated, but hilly and broken country.

Washington College was established a few years later than the college at Canonsburg. It has a large stone edifice of 3 stories, for the accommodation of students. The library and philosophical apparatus are valuable. The officers are a president and 2 professors, one of languages, and one of mathematics and natural philosophy. The number of students, in 1817, was about 100, a great part of whom were pursuing studies preparatory to the collegiate course. Commencement is held on the fourth Wednesday or Thursday in September, after which there is a vacation till the 1st of November. The course of education is completed here in 3 years.

Washington, city, & metropolis of the United States, in the district of Columbia. Lon. 1. 52. W. Philadelphia; 58. 52. W. Ferro; 77. 2. W. Greenwich; 79. 22. W. Paris. Lat. 38. 58. N. Pop. in 1800, 3,210; in 1810, 8,208; in 1820, 13,247. H. 2,141; 994 of brick, 1,147 of wood. The city of Washington became the seat of the national government in 1800. It is situated on the Maryland side of the Potomac, 295 m. by the course of the river and bay, from the Atlantic, on a point of land between the Eastern branch and the Potomac; and its site, as laid out, extends 2 or 3 m. up each of these rivers. It is separated from Georgetown by Rock creek, over which are two bridges, and there is a bridge over the Potomac more than a mile in length, leading to Alexandria. A canal is constructed from the Potomac, passing up the Tiber, a small stream which flows through Washington, and then across the plain of the city to the Eastern branch, forming a communication between the two rivers.

The natural situation of Washington is pleasant and salubrious; and it is laid out on a plan, which, when completed, will render it one of the handsomest and most commodious cities in the world. It is divided into squares by spacious streets or avenues, running N. and S., intersected by others at right angles; these are crossed transversely by 15 other spacious streets, or avenues, named after the different states. The rectangular streets are designated by the letters of the alphabet and by numbers. The grand avenues, and such streets as lead immediately to public places, are from 130 to 160 feet wide; the other streets are from 90 to 110 feet wide. A very small part of the plan only is as yet completed. The buildings, which cover but a small portion of the site as laid out, stand in 4 or 5 separate divisions, and Washington at present, exhibits the appearance, not of one regular city, but of a collection of villages; in which the splendid public edifices appear of a disproportionate grandeur.

The principal public buildings and institutions in the city, are the Capitol and the President's house, of stone; the buildings for the state, treasury, war & navy departments, and the general post office, all large brick edifices; the navy yard, extensive barracks for the marine corps, a jail, a theatre, a public library, 4 banks, including a branch of the U. S. bank, 4 market-houses, a city hall, 2 masonic halls, a circus, an infirmary, an orphan asylum, a college, and 14 houses of public worship, 3 for Presbyterians, 3 for Catholics, 2 for Episcopalians, 2 for Baptists, 2 for Methodists, 1 for Friends, and 1 for Unitarians.—There are 5 newspapers published in the city.

The Capitol is finely situated on an eminence, commanding a beautiful prospect of the Potomac, of every part of the city, and of a wide extent of the surrounding country. It is surrounded by an elegant iron railing, enclosing 20 acres of ground, planted with various kinds of trees & shrubs; and the ground immediately to the west of the capitol has been enclosed for a botanic garden. The two wings are 100 feet square each, connected by a well proportioned centre now building. It is built of white free stone, and when completed, will be a most magnificent edifice, presenting a front of 362 feet.

The President's house is situated on a gentle elevation about a mile and a half west of the capitol, and is built of the same kind of stone, and covered with copper. It is a very elegant edifice, 170 feet by 85, of 2 stories, with a suitable basement story. The buildings which contain the offices for the great departments of government, consist of 4 spacious brick edifices of 2 stories, covered with slate, situated at a small distance from the President's house. In these buildings are kept the papers, records, archives, and offices of the departments of State, of the Treasury, of War, and of the Navy. The General Post Office is a large brick edifice, situated about a mile WNW. of the Capitol, and contains, besides the various offices belonging to the Post Office establishment, the General Land Office; the Patent Office, where are deposited all the models of inventions for which patents have been granted, forming a very extensive and curious collection; and a temporary library room for the national library, purchased in 1815, of the Hon. Thomas Jefferson, late president of the United States, and consisting of about 8,000 volumes. The navy yard is situated on the Eastern branch, which forms a safe and commodious harbour, being sufficiently deep for large ships about 4 miles from its mouth. The city hall, commenced in 1820, is 251 feet in length, 50 in breadth, 2 stories high at the wings, and one in the centre, and is covered with slate.

On the 24th of August, 1814, this city was taken by the British, who burnt the public edifices, not sparing even the national library. All these edifices are now rebuilt and repaired, except the Capitol, which is not yet finished. The foundation of the centre of the Capitol was laid on the the 24th of August, 1818, just 4 years after the conflagration; and it will be completed earlier, probably, than it would have been, but for the visit of the British. This event has tended to increase the prosperity of the city; the national pride having been excited not only to rebuild what was destroyed, but to complete what was unfinished. The amount expended by the U. S. on the public buildings in the city, previously to their destruction by the British, was $1,214,291. The subsequent appropriations for rebuilding and repairing, to 1821, have amounted to $1,207,788.

Columbian College is finely situated on elevated ground, $1\frac{1}{4}$ m. N. of the President's house, commanding a view of the city, of Georgetown, Alexandria, the Potomac, and a wide extent of the surrounding country. The college edifice, begun in 1820, and finished 1821, is 117 feet by 47, of 5 stories; calculated to accommodate about 100 students; containing also a chapel, a dining hall, library, and lecture rooms. The college was first opened for instruction Jan. 9, 1822, with 30 students, and incorporated by act of congress, Feb. 9, 1821. The legislative government is entrusted to trustees not exceeding 31; the executive government to a president, who is also professor of general history, belles lettres, rhetoric, and moral philosophy; 5 professors, 1 of the learned languages, 1 of mathematics and natural philosophy, 1 of experimental philosophy, 1 of anatomy and physiology, and 1 of chemistry and geology; and 2 tutors. Connected with the college is a preparatory school, and also a Baptist theological seminary with 3 professors, 1 of divinity and pulpit eloquence, 1 of languages and biblical literature, and 1 of ecclesiastical history and Christian discipline. The college has been commenced with a favourable promise of becoming a useful and flourishing institution.

Waterloo, t. Neth., in South Brabant; 9 S. by E. Brussels. Pop. 1,879. This place is rendered famous by a tremendous battle fought, on the 18th of June, 1815, between the French under Bonaparte, and the Allies under the duke of Wellington and prince Blucher. The forces engaged were, until late in the evening nearly equal, the French reckoning 71,000 men, while the troops under Wellington, including 15,000 under Bulow, who came up early in the afternoon, were 73,000. The French were defeated with a loss stated at 40,000 killed, 14,000 prisoners, and 300 pieces of cannon. The loss of the Allies was stated at 29,000 killed. This great battle was most important in its consequences, and terminated the war which grew out of the French revolution, and which had, for more than 20 years, convulsed Europe. The fate of Bonaparte was here sealed, his empire overthrown, and he was afterwards sent a state prisoner to St. Helena. Louis XVIII. was restored to the throne of France, and the power of the hereditary monarchs in Europe established. Since this event Waterloo has been the constant resort of travellers from various countries; many of whom have covered its fields and church with monuments, to commemorate the death of those who fell in the battle.

Weimar, (Saxe,) grand duchy, Ger., lying on the south of the Prussian government of Erfurt, and bordering on Gotha. It is composed of two parts or provinces, Weimar and Eisenach, which are separated from each other.

	Sq. m.	Pop.	Chief towns.
Weimar	977	134,729	Weimar.
Eisenach	449	66,271	Eisenach.
	1,426	201,000

The province of Weimar comprehends the duchies of Weimar and Jena, with a part of the principality of Altenburg, the chief part of the circle of Neustadt, and the petty districts of Ilmenau, Oldisleben, and Alstadt, which lie scattered in Thuringia. The province of Eisenach lies on the west side of Gotha, and to the east of Hesse Cassel. See Eisenach. The surface of the province of Weimar is agreeably diversified; the soil fertile, producing corn sufficient for consumption, and has good pastures, which feed numerous flocks of sheep; but the larger cattle are less attended to. The province of Eisenach is more mountainous and less fertile. The revenue is about £150,000. The government is a limited monarchy; administered by the grand duke, with a parliament on a liberal plan. The religion is Lutheran. The Catholics are computed at 8,000; the Calvinists at 6,000.

Weimar, t. Ger., capital of the above grand duchy, on Ilm; 46 SW. Leipsic, 94 W. Dresden. Lon. 11. 21. E. Lat. 50. 59. N. Pop. in 1816, 7,954; including the court and military, 10,000. H. 900. It is situated in a pleasant valley, with a woody mountain to the north, and hills of little elevation to the south and east, while the river winds along the south side of the town. The prospect is agreeable, particularly in summer, when the gardens surrounding the town, appear to encircle it with foliage. The houses are built in plain and somewhat antique style. The grand ducal residence is a large castle, finely situated to the east of the town, with a park extending to the banks of the Ilm, and open to the public. The Belvidere, another residence of the reigning family, is situated on a delightful eminence to the south. The town contains 2 Luth. chh., a work house, a hospital, a gymnasium, a seminary for schoolmasters, an academy for drawing, painting and sculpture, an extensive institution connected with the study of geography and statistics, and a public library of upwards of 100,000 vols. Weimar is a town of literary celebrity, and has long held the same rank in Germany for literature, as Dresden has for the fine arts; and owing to the liberal patronage of the court, a number of the best writers of the last and present age, have either been educated or residents here. In the early years of the present century there were residing here more than 20 writers of note, among whom were Schiller, Goethe, Herder, Wieland, and Kotzebue; the last of whom was a native.

Westminster, city, Eng., on the left bank of the Thames, so united to London as to appear one city, and forming part of the metropolis. Pop. in 1811, 162,085. H. 17,555. It is the residence of the monarchs of Great Britain, the seat of the parliament, and of the high courts of justice. Some of its public buildings are Carlton palace, the residence of the present king, the palace of St. James, Buckingham-house, Westminster Abbey, Westminster Hall, and the houses of the lords and commons. It is said to take its name from the abbey or minster, situated to the west of St. Paul's, or the city of London. In early times, this noble part of the great metropolis of the kingdom was a little, mean, unhealthy place, with nothing worthy of notice but its minster or abbey, situated in a marshy island, called Thorney. It was for many ages, a place entirely distinct from London, and there was a large space between them. The Strand was the road which led from London to that town, and it was open on either side to the Thames and to the fields.—It contains two parishes, St. Margaret's and St. John's, and 7 others within its liberties, viz. St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, St. James's, St. Ann's, St. Clement's Danes, Saint Mary-le-Strand, Saint George's, Hanover-square, and St. Paul's, Covent-garden, with the precinct of the Savoy. There are besides many chapels of ease and houses of worship of almost all denominations. The celebrated school of Westminster was re-founded by Elizabeth, in 1590, with a foundation for the classical education of 40 boys, and usually has, in addition to these, 300 or 400 others. The government of both city and liberties, is under the jurisdiction of the dean and chapter of Westminster, in civil as well as ecclesiastical affairs. Two members are returned to parliament. See London.

Westphalia, one of the late 9 circles of Ger., bounded N. by the German ocean, E. by Lower Saxony, S. by Lower Rhine, and W. by the Netherlands. The ancient Saxons were divided into Westphalians, Angrians, and Eastphalians. The people inhabiting between the Weser and the Rhine, were called Westphalians, and the tract of country inhabited by them, has from thence been called Westphalia. This circle included the bishoprics of Paderborn, Munster, Liege, and Osnabruck; the duchy of Verden; the principality of Minden; the abbies of Corvey, Stablo, Werden, Cornelius Munster, Essen, Thorn, and Hervorden;

the duchy of Cleves, with the county of Mark; the duchies of Juliers and Berg, Nassau Siegen, and Nassau Dillenburg; the principalities of East Friesland and Meurs; the counties of Sayn, Wied-Runkel, Schauenburg, Oldenburg, Delmenhorst, Lippe, Bentheim, Tecklenburg, Hoya, Virnenburg, Diepholz, Spiegelberg, Rietberg, Pyrmont, Grönsfeld, Reckheim; the signiories of Anhalt and Winneburg; the county of Holzapfel; the signiories of Witten, Blankenheim, Geroldstein, Gehmen, Gimborn and Neustadt, Wickerad, Mylendonk, and Riechenstein; the county of Kerpen and Lommersum; the signiory of Schleiden, and the county of Hallermund, to which in the matricula are reckoned moreover to belong the signiories of Dyck, Severn, Kniphausen, Keyl, Mechernich, Eyss, Schlenacken, Wylre Richold, Dreyz, and Schonau, together with the cities of Cologne, Aix-le-Chapelle, and Dortmund. Pop. about 2,500,000. Sq. m. about 27,000. The soil is not generally fertile. This country now belongs chiefly to Prussia, Hanover, Oldenburg, and Netherlands.

Westphalia, late duchy, Ger., bounded E. by the circle of the Upper Rhine, on the other 3 sides by that of Westphalia; but belonging politically to the circle of the Lower Rhine; now forming a part of the Prussian province of Westphalia, and government of Arensburg. Sq. m. about 1,700. Pop. about 140,000; almost all Catholics. The southern part is unfit for tillage, but has good pasturage, and is rich in forests and mines: the central part is more level and fertile.

Westphalia, one of the temporary kingdoms of Bonaparte, created in 1807, and overturned in 1813; composed of conquests from Prussia, Hesse Cassel, Hanover, and the smaller states to the west of the Elbe, bounded N. by Mecklenburg and the North sea, E. by Prussia and Saxony. It was divided into 8 departments. The chief towns were Cassel, the capital, Magdeburg, Brunswick, Halberstadt, Göttingen, Lüneburg, Osnaburg, and Marburg. Pop. during a part of the year 1810, 2,700,000; at other times about 2,000,000.

Westphalia, pr. Pru., bounded NW. by Netherlands, N. by Hanover, E. by Hesse Cassel, Lippe, Hanover and Brunswick, S. by Hesse Darmstadt and Nassau, SE. by Hesse Cassel and Waldeck, SW. by the government of Coblenz, and W. by the province of Juliers-Cleves-Berg. Sq. m. 7,565. Pop. 1,000,000, partly Catholics, and partly Protestants. It is divided into 3 governments, Munster, Minden, and Arensburg. The surface is various; the governments of Minden and Arensburg being hilly; that of Munster level. The soil is not generally fertile, being stony in the hilly districts, and sandy in the plains. Flax is raised in great quantities; corn hardly sufficient for the consumption. There are extensive salt works; the principal manufactures are hardware and linen. There are mines of iron, lead, copper, and coal.

Whidah, country, Western Africa, the most important of those comprehended under the general appellation of the slave coast of Guinea; formerly an independent kingdom, which was subverted by the king of Dahomey, in 1727. Its sea shore did not exceed 9 or 10 leagues; its breadth inland not quite so great; but being every where covered with towns and villages, having an exceedingly fertile soil, its population was very considerable. The country is traversed by two rivers, the Jakin and Euphrates, and has been described by Europeans as one of the most beautiful countries in the world. The English, Dutch, and Portuguese established factories at Griwhee, or Whidah; but the residence of the sovereign was at Xabier, or Sabi.

Whitby, s-p. Eng., in N. Riding of Yorkshire, situated at the mouth of the Esk, on the German sea; 46 NNE. York, 243 N. London. Lon. 1. 55. W. Lat. 54. 30. N. Pop. in 1811, 7,483; in 1821, 10,275. It is situated on opposite declivities, one facing the east, the other the west, on the banks of the Esk, which forms the harbour, and divides the town into two nearly equal parts, connected by a draw bridge, so constructed as to admit ships of 500 tons to pass. The streets in general are inconvenient, most of them narrow, and some of them ill paved and steep. The town is very closely and irregularly built, but the houses of the opulent are elegant; there are few public buildings worthy of notice. The harbour is well secured by two piers, built of squared stone, one of them extending nearly 620 yards. Whitby carries on a great trade in coals, and also exports various articles of provision, tallow, &c., and the alum works in the neighbourhood employ a great number of hands. Ship building is carried on here extensively. The immense mountain of alum rock and the works for preparing alum are interesting objects.

White Mountains, called by the Indians Agio-cochook, range of mountains, N. H.; 18 or 20 m. long and 8 or 10 broad. The base of the mountains is about 25 SE. Lancaster, and Mount Washington, the highest summit, is 70 miles in a right line N. Concord, 82 N. by W. Portsmouth. Lon. 71. 20. W. Lat. 44. 15. N. In the western pass of these mountains there is a remarkable gap, called the Notch, which is esteemed one of the grandest natural curiosities in the United States. See Notch. The road from Lancaster to Portland passes through this opening. These mountains have been ascended by different routes. The course, which is usually considered as attended with the least difficulties, is that which commences at the plain of Conway, and follows the course of Ellis river, a northern branch of the Saco, having its origin high in the mountains. The view from the summit is rendered wonderfully grand and picturesque, by the magnitude of the elevation, the extent and variety of the surrounding scenery, and, above all, by the huge and desolate pile of rocks, extending to a great distance in every direction. They are supposed to be the highest mountains in North America to the east of the Mississippi. They are covered with snow 9 or 10 months in the year, and derive their name from their white appearance. They are seen many miles off at sea, and a person, when on their summit, has a distinct view of the Atlantic ocean, the nearest part of which is 65 miles distant in a direct line. The limit of forest trees is at the height of 4,428 feet. The sides are composed of micaceous schistos, and the summit of gneiss.

The elevation of Mount Washington was formerly estimated at 10, or 11,000 feet; but late computations founded on barometrical observation, have much reduced it; one making it 7,108, another 6,634, another 6,234, another 6,225, & another 6,103. The following table exhibits the elevation of the several peaks according to the measurement of capt. A. Partridge.

	Feet above the sea.	Feet above the base.
Mount Washington	6,234	4,464
2d peak	5,328	3,554
3d peak	5,058	3,288
4th peak	4,866	3,096
5th peak	4,711	2,941
6th peak	4,356	2,586
Base of the mountains	1,770

According to another measurement made by captain Partridge, in 1822, Mount Washington is 6,213 feet above tide water, and 4,821 above Crawford's, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles from the Notch; Mount Pleasant 4,713 feet above tide water.—These mountains have been repeatedly ascended within the last 50 years. The interest excited by them has been of late increasing, and to visit them is becoming fashionable. To an admirer of the grandeurs of nature the passage through the Notch, and the views from the summit, afford a rich repast. Though greatly inferior in elevation to the Andes or the Alps, yet they display the grandest mountain scenery, surpassing every thing of the kind to be seen elsewhere in this country.

White River, p-v. Lawrence co. Arkansas territory, W. 1,102.

White River, r. Arkansas territory, which rises among the Pawnee mountains, about Lon. 97. W. Lat. 36. N., and after a very serpentine course of about 1,300 miles, joins the Mississippi 50 miles above the mouth of the Arkansas. It is said to be navigable for boats 1,200 miles, and is 150 yards wide at its mouth. Its waters are clear and transparent, formed from springs flowing from the flinty hills that are found, for more than half its course, within a few miles of, and often immediately on, its banks. A great portion of the country, therefore, through which it flows, is rough and sterile, but the immediate margin of the river uniformly presents a strip of the richest alluvial bottom land from $\frac{1}{4}$ of a mile to $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile wide, eminently adapted to purposes of agriculture. The water of White river is so transparent that a pin may be seen 10 or 15 feet below the surface.

St. Johns, 170 NW. Boston, W. 427. Pop. in 1810, 2,110; in 1820, 2,341. Whitehall village is situated on both sides of Wood creek, at its entrance into the lake, at the head of navigation on the lake, and contains a Presbyterian meeting house, 4 ware houses, 10 stores, and upwards of 100 dwelling houses. It is a place of considerable trade, and is the great thoroughfare between New-York and Montreal. The situation of the village is low, being enclosed on both sides by high hills. A steam boat plies between Whitehall and St. Johns. The Northern or Champlain canal extends from the entrance of Wood creek into lake Champlain at this place, to Fort Edward on the Hudson, a distance of 22 miles; and is thence continued on the west side of the Hudson to Waterford. Whitehaven, s-p. Eng., in Cumberland, situated on a bay of the Irish sea; 40 SW. Carlisle, 303 NNW. London. Lon. 3. 34. W. Lat. 54. 32. N. Pop. in 1693, 2,272; in 1811, 10,106; in 1821, 16,522. It is built on a regular plan, the streets spacious and clean, crossing each other at right angles; the buildings neat, many of them genteel, covered with blue slate. It has a good artificial harbour, with 6 piers; also 6 yards for ship-building. The coal mines in the vicinity form the principal source of the wealth of this town. About 80,000 waggon loads are supposed to be annually raised from these coleries. In Jan. 1822, there were belonging to this port 181 vessels, carrying 26,220 tons. The trade consists, principally, in the exportation of coals to Ireland, but is also extended to Africa, America, and the West-Indies. Markets on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.

Wielicza, or Wieliczka, t. Aust. Poland, in Galicia, circle of Bochnia; 7 SE. Cracow. Pop. 3,414. H. 341. It is the seat of a salt & mine office, and remarkable for its extensive and productive salt mines. These celebrated ex-cavations are divided into 3 parts, and not only entirely undermine the town of Wielicza, but reach to a considerable extent beyond its limits. The length of the great mine, from east to west, is 6,000 feet, its breadth 2,000, its greatest depth 800; but the veins of salt are not limited to this extent, their length and depth not being ascertained. There are 10 shafts, but not a single spring has been discovered in the mine. There are 10 entrances, and in one of these is a winding stair case of 470 steps. On entering the subterranean regions, the stranger is struck with the magnitude and beauty of the vaulted passages; he sees chapels with altars cut out of the saline rock, with crucifixes or images, and lamps continually burning before them. In another part he observes vast chambers, which serve as store houses for the casks of salt, or for the forage of the horses, which are employed in dragging loads of salt from the edges of the mine to the centre. Here is a sort of subterranean commonwealth, consisting of many families, who have their peculiar laws and polity; many of the people were born here, and seldom or never go out. The whole number of men employed in them is about 700; the quantity of salt annually obtained from the mines is about 600,000 quintals.

Wigan, t. Eng., in Lancashire; 39 S. Lancaster, 196 NNW. London. Lon. 2. 33. W. Lat. 53. 31. N. Pop. in 1811, 14,060; in 1821, 17,716. It has an irregular, yet neat appearance; of late much improved. An extensive trade is carried on here in the manufacture of coarse linens, checks, calicoes, and other cotton goods; and there are large brass and pewter works. That species of coal, called Cannel, is found in great plenty in the neighbourhood. It is so soft before it is brought out into the air, that they make snuff-boxes, and other toys of it. Wigan is situated on a small stream, called Douglass, which is made navigable to the Ribble, and joins to a canal from Liverpool. It sends 2 members to parliament, and has markets on Monday and Friday.

Wight, isl. in the English channel, near the coast, & forming a part of the county of Hants. Its form is an irregular square, or as it has been fancifully supposed, like a bird with expanded wings; about 21 miles in length, & 13 in breadth, containing 5 towns, 30 parishes, 105,000 acres, of which about 75,000 are arable, and 20,000 pasture land. Pop. 31,611; 3,309 families employed in trade & manufactures, 2,460 in agriculture. The S. coast is bounded with steep rocks of chalk & pasture, & on the W. are those rocks called the Needles. The air is healthy, & the inhabitants are in general long-lived, the soil is fertile, and the quantity of corn produced was formerly estimated at 7 or 8 times the consumption. This island was known to the Romans by the name of Vectis, or Vecta; and by the Britons called Guith. The towns are Newport, Newtown, Yarmouth, Cowes, and Ride. The 3 first are boroughs, and send each 2 members to parliament.

Williamsburg, city, James City co. Va.; 12 W. Yorktown, 55 E. by S. Richmond, W. 173. Lon. 76. 55. W. Lat. 37. 16. N. Pop. 1,402. It is situated between two rivulets, one of which flows into York, and the other into James river. It is regularly laid out, and was formerly the the metropolis of the state. It contains a state house, a court house, a jail, a hospital, a college, and an Episcopal church. The principal streets run parallel, and are crossed by smaller ones at right angles. The main street is about a mile long, terminated at one end by the old capital, and at the other by the college. The houses are mostly indifferent ones of wood, old, and decayed; and the town has for several years been on the decline.

The college of William and Mary was founded here in 1691, in the time of King William, who gave it an endowment of about £2,000 and 20,000 acres of land, together with a revenue of a penny a pound on tobacco exported to the plantations from Virginia and Maryland. To these, other endowments were added, and the whole annual income of the college was formerly estimated at 3,000 pounds. The income at present is greatly diminished. It formerly had 6 professors, but at present only 3 or 4. The college edifice is a large misshapen pile of building, affording but indifferent accommodations for students. The library contains about 3,000 volumes, and the philosophical apparatus is valuable.

Williamstown, p-t. Orange co. Vt.; 11 S. Montpelier, W. 513. Pop. 1,481. Here is a small pond from which issues two streams; the one flowing N. communicates by means of Onion river with lake Champlain; the other flowing S. communicates by means of White river with the Connecticut. The gulf through which the eastern stream flows is a great natural curiosity. There is scarcely room for the water to pass between two elevated mountains; a road is dug through on one side, in some places in solid rock.

Williamstown, p-t. Berkshire co. Mass., in NW. corner of the state; 28 N. Lenox, 135 W. by N. Boston, W. 393. Lon. 73. 15. W. Lat. 42. 38. N. Pop. in 1810, 1,843; in 1820, 2,010. It is situated in NW. corner of the state, in a pleasant valley, having Saddle mountain on the east, and hills which separate it from New York on the west. Hoosack river flows through the north east part. It is a good agricultural township, and contains a woollen manufactory, 2 Congregational meeting houses, and a college. Here is a mineral spring, whose waters are useful in scorbutic complaints.

Williams College, named after its founder, and incorporated in 1793, is pleasantly situated in the north part of the town, and is a respectable and flourishing seminary. The buildings are 2 brick edifices of 4 stories, and a laboratory. The West college contains a chapel, a library room, and 28 rooms for students. The East college contains a room for the philosophical apparatus, and 31 rooms for students. The college library is a well chosen collection of about 1,400 volumes. The students' library contains about 700 volumes. The philosophical apparatus and the chemical are valuable. The college is under the direction of a board of trustees, consisting at present of 15 members. The executive government is intrusted to a president, a professor of mathematics and natural philosophy and lecturer on chemistry, a professor of languages, and 3 tutors. The number of students, in 1822, 78. The whole number graduated from the time of the foundation to 1817, was 473.

Commencement is held on the 1st Wednesday in September. There are 3 vacations; the 1st from commencement, 3 weeks; the 2d from the 4th Wednesday in December, 7 weeks; the 3d from the 3d Wednesday in May, 3 weeks.

It is built on gently rising ground, the most elevated part of which is 112 feet above tide water, and its situation is pleasant and healthy. It is regularly laid out, the streets intersecting each other at right angles, and the houses are mostly of brick. It contains a town house, a spacious alms house, 2 market houses, 3 banks, a United States arsenal, a Friends' boarding school for young ladies, a public library of about 1,500 volumes, and 10 houses of public worship, 2 for Presbyterians, 2 for Episcopalians, 1 for Friends, 1 for Baptists, 1 for Roman Catholics, 1 for Methodists, and 2 for Africans. A stone building was erected here for a college before the revolution, and a college was incorporated in 1803, but it has never gone into operation, and the building is appropriated for schools. Two semi-weekly newspapers are published here.

The Christiana is navigable as far as Wilmington for vessels drawing 14 feet of water. The shipping owned here, in 1821, amounted to 10,043 tons. The trade of the town is considerable; its exports consist chiefly in flour. It manufactures considerable quantities of leather. There is a bridge over the Brandywine, at the north entrance of the town, and another at the south entrance over the Christiana. The country around Wilmington is pleasant and finely situated. On the Brandywine, separated at a little distance from the body of the town, there is a village of about 100 houses, nearly one half of which are included within the borough; and 14 flour mills, the finest collection in the United States. The Brandywine and the Christiana with their branches afford a great number of excellent seats for mills and manufactories. In 1815, there were included within a space of 9 miles around Wilmington, 44 flour mills, 13 cotton manufactories, 15 saw mills, 6 woollen manufactories, 6 gunpowder mills, 2 paper mills, 2 snuff mills, and several other mills and manufactories.

Wilmington, p-t. port of entry, & cap. New Hanover co. N. C., on the E. side of Cape Fear river, just below the confluence of the NE. and NW. branches, about 35 miles from the sea; 90 SE. Fayetteville, 93 SSW. Newbern, W. 433. Lon. 78. 10. W. Lat. 34. 11. N. Pop. 2,633; blacks 1,535. It contains a court house, a jail, an academy, 2 banks, a printing office, an Episcopal, and a Presbyterian church. The exports from this town, in 1816, amounted to $1,061,112. The exports of the whole state amounted only to $1,328,771. The shipping owned here, in 1816, amounted to 8,952 tons. It is well situated for trade, but is accounted unhealthy. The harbour admits vessels of 300 tons, but the entrance is rendered dangerous and difficult by a large shoal. Opposite to the town are 2 islands which extend with the course of the river, dividing it into 3 channels. They afford the finest rice fields in the state. On the 4th Nov. 1819, about 200 buildings were consumed here by fire, the damage was estimated at about $1,000,000.

Wilton, (an. Ellandune,) t. Eng., in Wiltshire, on the Willy; 3 W. Salisbury, 85 WSW. London. Pop. 1,963. It is a place of great antiquity, and is supposed to have been the seat of the British king Carvilius, and afterwards the capital of the West Saxon dominions. After the conquest it was for ages famous for its monastic institutions, particularly its abbey. Though much reduced from its ancient splendour, it is still the county town, sends 2 members to parliament; and has a well endowed free school. Here Sir Philip Sidney wrote his Arcadia. Wilton house, the seat of the earl of Pembroke, is the most magnificent house in the county, and has a splendid collection of pictures and statues.

Winchester, city, Eng., in Hants, on W. side of the river Itchin, called by Ptolemy and Antoninus, Venta Belgarum, and by the Britons, Caer Gwent, i. e. White City ; 61 ESE. Bath, 62 SW. London. Lon. 1. 18. W. Lat. 51. 4. N. Pop. 6,705. Bp. see. It is a very ancient city, known in the time of the Romans, was the capital of the West Saxon kingdom and the metropolis of all the Saxon kingdoms, when united under Egbert. It is about $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. in circuit, and contains one of the most remarkable cathedrals in England, 8 chh., several dissenting meeting houses, a college, an infirmary, a town hall, and 2 banking houses. The houses generally have an appearance of antiquity ; the streets broad, remarkably clean, and well lighted. The cathedral is a vast edifice, the work of different ages ; 545 feet in its whole length, 87 broad ; height of the tower 150 feet. It is interesting on account of the importance of the scenes that have been transacted in it, and the characters of the personages by whose mortal remains it is hallowed. The ecclesiastical buildings in the city and suburbs were formerly very numerous ; the colleges and chapels alone amounting to upwards of 90. The college was founded by William of Wickham, bishop of the city, who laid the first stone, in 1387, with endowments for a warden, 70 scholars, 10 fellows, &c., with exhibitions to New College, Oxford, which was founded and endowed by the same benefactor. It has markets on Wednesday and Saturday, and sends 2 members to parliament.—Native, Bp. Lowth.

A college was established here in 1789, by the legislature of Nova Scotia, and endowed with £400 per annum ; and in 1802, a royal charter was obtained, by which it was ordained and granted, that it should be called King's college, and be a university, and enjoy all such privileges as are enjoyed by the universities of Great Britain ; the archbishop of Canterbury, for the time being, to be patron of the college, the bishop of Nova Scotia visitor, and the chief civil officers of Nova Scotia governors of the college ; the college to consist of a president, 3 or more fellows and professors, and 12 or more scholars ; and to receive from government £1,000 per annum towards its support. The officers have hitherto consisted only of a president and vice president. Four scholarships, of £20 each for 4 years, have been instituted from the funds ; and the society in England for propagating the gospel, have founded 8 additional scholarships, with a stipend of £30 per annum for 7 years. A useful library is attached to the institution. A grammar school, connected with the college, has been founded for 40 boys. Many young men have already been sent forth from this seminary, who are now in the exercise of the different professions in the British provinces.

Windsor, or New Windsor, t. Eng., in Berkshire, situated on the right bank of the Thames, which separates it from Buckinghamshire ; 22 W. London, 38 ESE. Oxford. Lon. 0. 32. W. Lat. 51. 28. N. Pop. 5,272. It is beautifully situated on the side of a hill, and consists of six principal streets well paved and lighted, and several smaller ones. It is built mostly of brick, contains a stately guild-hall, a theatre, a hospital for sick soldiers, and has many handsome buildings, but its chief ornament is its castle, which it owes to William the Conqueror. The castle stands on a high hill, having a beautiful command of the Thames, and has, for more than 700 years, been the favourite country residence of the British kings. It is a magnificent edifice, containing many splendid apartments very richly furnished. On the S. side of the town, is Windsor Great Park, well stocked with deer, in which is situated the cottage of George IV. It was formerly 14 miles in circuit, but has lately been much enlarged. The gardens are spacious and elegant. Windsor Forest, 56 miles in circuit, was originally formed for the exercise of the chase, a favourite amusement of many of the English sovereigns. St. George's chapel is a most beautiful Gothic building. On each side are the stalls of the sovereign and knights of the garter, with the insignia over each stall. Windsor sends 2 members to parliament. The market is on Saturday.

Winnipeg, or Winnipeck, lake, N. A., 240 m. in length, and from 5 to 60 in breadth. Lon. 95. 48. to 99. 12. W. Lat. 50. 22. to 53. 57. N. It communicates on its west side with Little Winnipeg lake by Dauphin river, St. Martin's lake, and Wetarhen river. On south side it receives the Assiniboine, or Red river, on southeast Winnipeg river; and on east side Mainwaring's river, Beren's river, and Poplar river, besides many smaller ones. The country around it is low, covered with pretty heavy timber, and the soil tolerably good, producing an abundance of wild rice.

Winnipeg River, r. N. A., which runs from the Lake of the Woods into the SE. part of lake Winnipeg. The river, through a considerable part of its course, is a succession of small lakes, and in several places there are falls of considerable height. At the entrance of the river into the lake, the North West Company & Hudson's Bay Company have each a fort.

Winnipiseogee, r. N. H., which runs from lake Winnipiseogee into the Merrimack, S. of Sanbornton.

Winnipiseogee, lake, N. H., east of the centre, towards the west side of Strafford co., surrounded by the townships of Centre harbour, Moultonborough, Tuftonborough, Wolfsborough, Alton, Guilford, and Meredith. Lon. 71. 5. to 71. 25. W. Lat. 43. 29. to 43. 44. N. It is about 23 miles long, from SE. to NW., and about 10, where widest, broad. It receives the waters of several small streams, but is supplied chiefly by subjacent springs, and its waters are conveyed off by the river Winnipiseogee, which joins the western branch of the Merrimack, at the SW. corner of Sanbornton, opposite to Salisbury, near Webster's falls. It is 472 feet above the level of the ocean, and 232 above the Merrimack, at the junction of their waters; and in some places it is unfathomable by any means in the possession of the inhabitants. It abounds in fish, and its waters are remarkably pure, but little, if at all inferior to those of lake George, N. Y. It is of a very irregular form; in the NW. it divides into 3 branches, or large bays, and in the SE. is a long arm, called Merry-meeting Bay. Several large promontories intrude into the lake; the principal of which are Meredith neck, Moultonborough neck, and Tuftonborough neck. It is bordered in various parts by hills and mountains; on the NW. is Red mountain, on the N. Ossipee, on the S. Mount Major, and Gunstock mountain. The lake contains a great multitude of islands, said to amount to 365; some of them large enough for farms of considerable extent, & are of beautiful appearance. The prospect of the lake and its environs is enchanting.

The following description of the appearance of the lake, as seen from the summit of Red mountain, is given by Dr. Dwight.—“Immediately at the foot of the height, on which we stood, and in the bottom of the immense valley below, spread south-eastward the waters of the Winnipiseogee in complete view; except that one or two of its arms were partially concealed by intervening peninsulas. A finer object of the same nature was perhaps never seen. The lakes, which I had visited in my northern & western excursions, were all of them undivided masses, bordered by shores comparatively straight. This was, centrally, a vast column, if I may be allowed the term, 23 miles in length, and from 6 to 8 in breadth, shooting out with inimitable beauty a succession of arms, some of them not inferior in length to the whole breadth of the lake. These were fashioned with every elegance of figure, bordered with the most beautiful winding shores, and studded with a multitude of islands. Their relative positions, also, could scarcely be more happy.

“Many of the islands are large, exquisitely fashioned, and arranged in a manner not less singular than pleasing. As they met the eye, when surveyed from this summit, they were set in groups on both sides of the great channel, and left this vast field of water unoccupied between them. Their length was universally at right angles to that of the lake; and they appeared as if several chains of hills originally crossing the country in that direction, had by some convulsion been merged in the water so low, that no part of them was left visible, except the oblong segments of their summits. Of those, which, by their size and situation, were most conspicuous, I counted 45, without attempting to enumerate the smaller ones, or such as were obscured. The points, which intrude into this lake are widely different from those of lake George; bold, masculine bluffs, impinging directly upon the water. These, in several instances, were spacious peninsulas, fitted to become rich and delightful residences of man, often elevated into handsome hills, & sloping gracefully into the lake.”

Winnborough, p-t. & cap. Fairfield co. S. C.; 8 W. of the Wateree, 30 NNW. Columbia, 145 NNW. Charleston, W. 490. Pop. about 200. It contains a court house and a jail. Wittenberg, city, Pru. Saxony, in Merseburg, capital of a circle, formerly capital of the electorate or duchy of Saxony, on the Elbe ; 38 SE. Magdeburg, 60 N. Dresden. Lon. 12. 46. E. Lat. 51. 53. N. Pop. 4,920. H. 638. It is situated in a level and sandy spot, which, since the shady walks around the town were cut down by the French in 1813, presents but little variety. It consists of one principal street, with widely spread suburbs. It is defended from the inundations of the Elbe by a dyke, and has considerable linen manufactures. It has a castle, a hospital, 3 chh., and a lyceum with a library. Wittenberg had formerly a university, founded in 1502, memorable as the cradle of the reformation, but it was united with that of Halle in 1815. Luther was appointed a professor in the university in 1508, and, in 1517, began to oppose the corruptions of the church of Rome. Luther and Melancthon lie buried in the university church, and to the former a monumental colossal statue was erected in Wittenberg so lately as 1821, with great solemnity.

Woolwich, t. Eng., in Kent, on the Thames, 8 miles below London. Lon. 0. 3. E. Lat. 51. 30. N. Pop. in 1811, 17,054. It was formerly only a small village, and owes its consequence to the establishment of a royal dock in the reign of Henry VIII. The dock-yard has been progressively increasing since its establishment, and in its present state includes about 5 furlongs in length by one in breadth ; within which space there are 2 dry-docks, 5 ships, 3 mast-ponds, a mould-loft, store-houses of various descriptions, mast-houses, sheds for timber, dwellings for the various offices, a very complete smithery for the manufacture of anchors, &c. This dock-yard is under the direction of a commissioner, who has also the control of that of Deptford ; and during the late war the number of artificers and labourers employed here, amounted to nearly 2,000 ; since the peace they are reduced to about two thirds of that number. The arsenal at Woolwich is the grand national depot for every species of ordnance, both military and naval, and contains an immense quantity of guns, gun-carriages, military wagons, and every thing pertaining to the department of the ordnance. The arsenal includes nearly 60 acres, and contains various piles of brick buildings for different uses. The number of artificers, labourers, and boys, employed, is about 3,000, exclusive of the convicts, who amount to about 900, generally employed in the most laborious offices.

At Woolwich is a royal military academy, instituted in 1719, but not finally arranged till 1741. It is under the direction of the master general and board of ordnance for the time being ; a lieutenant-governor, an inspector, a professor of mathematics, and 4 masters ; a professor of chemistry ; a professor of fortification, and 2 masters ; one French master, 2 drawing masters, a fencing master, a dancing master, &c. The number of pupils, styled cadets, since the peace, has been reduced to 100. They are of the most respectable families ; when admitted must be at least 4 feet and 9 inches high, and not exceed 16, nor be under 14 years of age. As soon as they are admitted on the establishment, they begin to receive pay, at the rate of £45 12s. 6d. per annum. The building is of a castellated form, and was built at the expense of about £150,000.—Woolwich contains also barracks, a pagoda, used as a repository for models, several hospitals, and other charitable establishments.

It is pleasantly situated, and is one of the most considerable inland towns in New England, and is a place of much wealth and trade. The principal street is upwards of a m. in length; it is well built, & has a number of elegant brick houses. In 1791, 2 editions of the bible, one in large folio, the other in royal quarto, the first of the kind published in America, were printed in this town. The American Antiquarian Society holds its meetings here, and for its accommodation a handsome and commodious building was erected in 1820. It contains a valuable cabinet, and a library of about 7,000 volumes.

It is one of the most ancient cities in England, finely situated in a beautiful and fertile vale, having a variety of agreeable prospects. The principal streets are broad and well paved. The cathedral is a noble Gothic edifice; 514 feet long, 78 broad, and 68 high, with a tower 200 feet in height. There are 9 parish churches, besides 2 without the walls, 3 grammar schools, 7 hospitals, and a public infirmary. The porcelain manufacture is carried on here extensively, and has reached great perfection; there is also an extensive manufacture of gloves. Here are 3 markets weekly, on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, and 2 members are returned to parliament. In the cathedral is the tomb of king John, supposed to be the oldest royal monument remaining in England; he was buried in the choir, between two bishops.—Near this city, in the year 1651, a battle was fought between Charles II. & Cromwell, which proved a decisive blow to royalty. The prisoners, to the number of 8,000, were sold as slaves to the American planters.

Pop. according to the official statement, in 1818, 1,395,462.—It is divided into 4 circles, which are subdivided into 12 districts or counties.

Circles.	Sq. m.	Pop. in 1815.	Ch. towns.
The Neckar	1,365	365,100	Stuttgart
The Schwarzwald	1,780	362,100	Reutlingen
The Jaxt	1,993	329,300	Elwangen
The Danube	2,279	329,900	Ulm
	7,417	1,386,400

Towns. The principal towns are Stuttgart, the capital, Ulm, Reutlingen, Tubingen, Hall, Ludwigsburg, Biberach, Kirchheim, Schorndorf, Esslingen, Echingen, Calw, Heilbron, and Goppingen.

Government. The government is a constitutional monarchy. The new constitution was formed in 1819. The executive power is vested in the monarch, controlled by a representative body. The titled classes are numerous, and possess extensive privileges. The king holds the sixth place in the Germanic diet.

Religion. The religion of the majority is Lutheran, but all sects are tolerated. The number of Lutherans is stated at 956,000; Catholics 431,000; Reformed 2,200; Jews 8,000.

Face of the country, &c. The great natural features of this country are 2 ranges of mountains, one called the Black Forest, or Schwarzwald, extending along the western frontier, the other called the Swabian or Wurtemberg Alp, an insulated range of rocky hills, destitute of wood, beginning at Rotweil, and traversing the kingdom in a northeast direction. On these lofty tracts the climate is cold and bleak. But the rest of the country is agreeably diversified with hills of moderate elevation, and pleasant valleys, which enjoy a mild and pleasant climate. The principal rivers are the Danube & Neckar; also the Enz, Muhr, Kocker, Jaxt, & Tauber.

Soil and Products. Wurtemberg, with the exception of the two mountainous ranges, is one of the most fertile and best cultivated parts of Germany. It produces the various kinds of grain; wine, the best qualities known in England by the name of the Neckar wine; fruits of various kinds. The minerals are iron, silver, copper, coal, and porcelain. The Black Forest produces abundance of pine and fir, considerable quantities of which are exported.

Munich. Lon. 9. 55. E. Lat. 49. 46. N. Pop. 21,380. H. 1,913. Bp. see. It stands in a valley, on the Maine, & around the city are extensive vineyards, and nothing can be more pleasant than its environs. It is divided by the river into two parts, which are connected by an elegant bridge. The Maine is here a large stream, presenting, with its boats and barges, an animating picture. The town is, however, indifferently built, having no regular streets, and hardly any stone buildings, except the palace and churches. It contains a large palace, formerly belonging to the bishop, afterwards to the grand duke, a cathedral, 33 churches, 12 hospitals, great and small, a gymnasium, and a Cath. university, founded in 1483, with a library, botanic garden, an anatomical theatre, and cabinet of natural history. The number of students, in 1817, was 365. Yellowstone, or Roche Jaune, or Jaun, r. N.A., which rises from lake Eustis, in the Rocky mountains, near the sources of Lewis's river, about Lat. 43. 20. N., and after an ENE. course of about 1,100 miles, joins the Missouri, 1,880 miles from the Mississippi, Lon. 104. 0. W. Lat. 47. 50. N. This river is nearly or quite as large as the other branch, which retains the name of Missouri. The Bighorn, its great southern branch, the eastern branch of Lewis's river, and the Del Norte, are all said to have their source within half a mile of each other, in about Lat. 43. N. Captain Clark, the associate of capt. Lewis, descended this river in his return from the Pacific ocean. During its whole course from the point, at which he reached it, to the Missouri, a distance which he computed at 837 miles, it is navigable for batteaux. Its navigation is impeded by only one ledge of rocks, but this may be passed without difficulty. The banks of the river are low, but not subject to be overflowed, except at a short distance below the mountains. The colour of the river is a yellowish brown, and its bed is chiefly composed of loose pebble. The river flows with a velocity gradually decreasing, in proportion to its distance from the mountains ; the first part of its course 4 or 5 miles an hour, the latter part not more than 2. In the upper part of its course, the country consists of high, waving plains, bordered by stony hills, partially supplied with pine ; towards the Missouri, the country contains less timber, and spreads into extensive plains. Much of the land bordering on it is fertile. It abounds with beaver & otter, and along its banks are immense herds of elk, buffalo, and deer. The width of its bed at its confluence with the Missouri is 850 feet ; when measured by Lewis and Clark, the stream was 297 yards wide, and the deepest part of the channel 12 feet, the river having then fallen to its summer height.

Yemen, pr. Arabia, comprehending the finest and most fertile part of Arabia, called by the ancients Arabia Felix, surrounded by the Red sea, and by the provinces of Hadramaut, Nedsjed, and Hedsjas. Yemen is naturally divided into two parts, differing greatly in soil and climate ; that bordering on the Red sea is a dry, sandy plain, nearly 2 days' journey in breadth, and is scorched by the most torrid heats ; the other, extending immediately beyond this, is an elevated country, full of precipitous, yet fertile hills, and enjoying a much more temperate air. Coffee is the principal article of export. Yemen is one of the few parts of Arabia, which have been formed into a considerable monarchical state. It is subject to a sovereign, who assumes the modest title of Iman, or doctor, but exercises over his subjects an authority nearly absolute. He is, however, obliged to respect the schiecks, or hereditary chiefs, who here, as well as in other parts of Arabia, possess high influence.—The principal towns are Sana, the capital, and Taas, in the interior, Mocha and Aden on the coast. The trade is almost all carried on at Mocha.

York, (an. Eboracum), city, Eng., capital of Yorkshire, in the West Riding, on the Ouse and Foss; 94 S. Edinburgh, 198 N. by W. London. Lon. 1. 0. W. Lat. 54. 0. N. Pop. in 1811, 18,217. Abp. see. It is regarded as the capital of the north of England, and the second city in rank in the kingdom, though far surpassed in wealth and population by many of the more modern trading towns. It is an ancient city, and was successively the seat of Hadrian, Severus, and other Roman emperors. It is entered by 4 principal gates or bars, has 6 bridges, one over the Ouse, and 5 over the Foss; a cathedral, 23 churches, 20 within and 3 without the walls, houses of worship for Catholics, Methodists, Presbyterians, Independents, and Quakers; a guildhall, county hospital, lunatic asylum, and various other public buildings and institutions. The cathedral, commonly called York minster, is the boast not only of the city, but of England. Its whole length from east to west is 524½ feet; breadth of the east end 105, of the west 109; height of the grand lantern tower 213, of the two western towers 196; of the body of the church 99. It was a century and a half in building, from 1227 to 1377, and is venerable for its size, style, and ornaments. Of this magnificent structure, the western front is particularly superb, and the window on the east end is said scarcely to have its equal for tracery, painting, and preservation, and was the work of John Thornton, a glazier of Coventry, in 1405. In the reign of Henry V. York contained 44 parish churches and 17 chapels, and before the reformation it had a famous and wealthy abbey. Besides the lunatic asylum there is another institution called the Retreat, one mile from the city, for the same class of patients, belonging to the society of Friends. It has accommodations for about 60 patients, and is under excellent management. About 3 miles from the city stands Bishopthorpe, the magnificent palace of the archbishop.—Although the foreign commerce of York has been totally annihilated, it still retains considerable river trade; and vessels of 120 tons come up the Ouse as far as the bridge. There is some trade in gloves, linens, livery lace, glass, and drugs; and printing and bookselling are conducted on a large scale. It derives a great part of its support from its fairs, assizes, and races, and the winter residence of many of the provincial gentry.—It sends two members to parliament; market on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday; great fairs on Whit-Monday, July 10th, August 12th, and November 23d.—Native, bishop Porteus.

York, (formerly called Toronto,) the capital of Upper Canada, on NW. coast of lake Ontario, on N. side of an excellent harbour; 149 W. by S. Kingston. Lon. 79. 20. W. Lat. 43. 33. N. Pop. about 2,500. It contains upwards of 300 houses, the greater part of wood, but many are handsomely built of brick and stone. The public buildings are a government house, the house of assembly for the provincial parliament, a church, a court house, a jail, with various stores and buildings for different purposes of government. About a mile from the town are the barracks for the troops usually stationed here, a residence for the commanding officer, also a battery and two block houses, which protect the entrance of the harbour. The harbour is nearly circular, formed by a very narrow peninsula, which encloses a beautiful basin about $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. in circuit, and capable of containing in security a great number of vessels. The town is delightfully situated; the plot of ground marked out extends $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. along the harbour. The climate is mild, and the town well sheltered from the north winds by the high lands in the rear. In 1793, the site contained only one solitary Indian wigwam. It is now a flourishing town, increasing in population and trade. A weekly newspaper is published here.

Yorktown, or York, p-t. port of entry, & cap. York co. on S. side of York river; 12 ESE. Williamsburg, 29 NW. Norfolk, 70 ESE. Richmond, W. 187. Lon. 76. 52. W. Lat. 37. 22. N. Pop. about 700. York river affords at this town the best harbour in Virginia. It is contracted here to the width of a mile, and is inclosed within very high banks, under which the largest vessels may ride in safety. It is a place of some trade. The shipping belonging to this port, in 1816, amounted to 945 tons.—This town is famous for the capture of Lord Cornwallis and his army by the Americans, on the 19th of Oct. 1781.

Youghall, s-p. Ireland, in Cork, on a bay to which it gives name, at the mouth of the Black-water river; 25 E. Cork, 31 SW. Waterford. Pop. in 1821, 8,804. H. 1,222. The harbour has a bar at its mouth, which renders navigation difficult, but when this obstacle is surmounted, it is safe and commodious. The town consists of one very large street and suburbs, and has a large custom house, an exchange, and a collegiate church. It is situated on the side of a hill, the lower part of which is laid out in pleasant gardens. Towards the sea the town is defended by a small fort, with a mole for the security of shipping, and a quay to load and discharge goods. The inhabitants have a tolerable inland trade; and a manufactory of earthen-ware. It sends one member to parliament. Here the first potatoe is said to have been planted in Ireland.

Ypres, or Ipres, city, Neth., in West Flanders, capital of a district, on the river Y-perlee, from whence it takes its name; 20 S. Ostend, 16 NW. Lisle. Lon. 2. 53. E. Lat. 50. 51. N. Pop. 15,291. It is connected by a canal with Bruges, Ostend, and Nieuport, is fortified and tolerably well built. The principal public buildings are a very large Gothic town house, an elegant cathedral, an exchange, a chamber of commerce, and a college. The chief manufactures at present are linen, lace, cotton, thread, and silk.—It is said to have contained, in the 13th century, 200,000 inhabitants, who carried on a great trade in woollen cloth, but by the severity of the duke of Alva, the principal manufacturers were driven to England, from which time that branch of trade declined. Ypres has sustained several remarkable sieges.

Zanesville, p-t. & cap. Muskingum co. Ohio, on E. bank of the Muskingum opposite to Putnam; 60 E. Columbus, 60 N. Marietta, 70 NE. Chillicothe, W. 345. Lon. 82. 10. W. Lat. 39. 59. N. Pop. 2,052. It is a pleasant and flourishing town, and contains a court house, 2 banks, 2 printing offices, a woollen manufactory, 2 glass manufactories, and had, in 1816, 317 houses, many of which are handsome. There is a copperas mine near the town, and a copperas manufactory has lately been established here. Here are 2 bridges erected across the Muskingum. Zanesville is situated at the falls of the river, on which are erected numerous mills and manufacturing establishments, and it will probably become a large manufacturing town. On the Muskingum, between Zanesville and Waterford, many salt wells have been sunk, from which salt in large quantities has been manufactured. By boring to the depth of from 180 to 450 feet salt water of a good quality has been invariably found.

Zante, (an. Zacynthus), one of the Seven Ionian islands in the Mediterranean, situated to the S. of Cephalonia; of irregular form, 15 miles long, and 8 broad. Sq. m. 160. Pop. 40,000. In its aspect it is the finest of the Ionian islands, presenting, when viewed from the fort above the town of Zante, a prospect of vales and eminences richly cultivated, covered with vineyards, olive plantations, oranges, and other fruit trees, and containing numerous hamlets or villages. The whole surface of the island presents traces of subterraneous fire, discovered in some parts by warm sulphureous springs, in others by heat in the soil. It has springs of petroleum and mineral tar, which are productive. The climate, though very hot in summer, is not unwholesome. The chief products are currants, also olive oil, and wine; some cotton and silk. The corn raised is hardly equal to 4 months' consumption.

Zante, t. & capital of the island of Zante; 21 SSW. from the town of Chiarenza in the Morea. Lon. 21. 8. E. Lat. 37. 50. N. Pop. 16, or 18,000. Cath. and Greek bp. see. It is the largest town in the republic of the Seven islands, pleasantly situated at the bottom of a small bay, on a hill of gentle declivity. It resembles in its appearance an Italian town. The principal street, which traverses it in its whole length, is broad and handsome, bordered with well built houses and churches, and has a foot pavement. The houses are partly of brick and partly of wood; and on account of the frequency of earthquakes, seldom exceed one or two stories. The harbour is spacious; the environs extremely pleasant and picturesque. In 1820, several hundred houses were overthrown here by an earthquake.

Zealand, or Zeeland, pr. Neth., comprising the ancient county of Zealand and Dutch Flanders, composed chiefly of islands at the mouth of the Scheldt, viz. Schowen, Duiveland, Tholen, Walcheren, North and South Beveland, & Wolfersdyk. The continental part consists merely of a strip lying along the south bank of the Hond, or West Scheldt. The province is bounded N. by the Hond, or West Scheldt, E.

& S. by East Flanders, and W. by West Flanders and the sea. Pop. 111,108. Sq. m. 588. It is divided into 3 circles or districts, and 15 cantons. The chief towns are Middleburg, Flushing, and Zierick-see. The surface is level, and lies so low, that it is necessary to protect the country from inundation by strong dikes, which are kept up at great labour and expense. These dikes are from 20 to 30 yards in breadth at the bottom, and of sufficient width at top for two carriages to pass abreast; yet the country has been exposed to heavy calamities from the sea's breaking over the dikes in storms. The soil is a rich, black mould, excellent for pasturage, and for the culture of madder, flax, cole seed, &c. The exports are corn, madder, flax, salt meat, linen yarn, rape seed, and oil. The air is damp from exhalations of fresh water, productive of bilious complaints and agues. The majority of the inhabitants are Calvinists; there are also some Catholics, Lutherans, and Mennonists.

Zealand, or Seeland, the largest of the Danish islands, between the Cattegat & the Baltic, separated from Sweden by the Sound, & from Funen by the Great Belt; about 65 miles long, from N. to S., and 60 from E. to W. Sq. m. 2,607. Pop. 310,000. It has no mountains, but the surface is finely variegated, having small hills and fields of a fertile soil, intersected by canals, resembling in some parts, in summer, when the ground is covered with vegetation, the country of Lombardy. It produces large crops of corn, and has excellent pasture.

Zealand, (New), two islands in the South Pacific ocean, first discovered by Tasman, in 1642; sailed round by Capt. Cook, in 1769, & 1770. They are separated from each other by a strait, 12 or 15 miles wide. The northernmost, called by the natives Eaheinomauwee, is 436 miles long, and from 60 to 180 broad. The southernmost, called Tavai, or Tory Poenammoo, is 360 miles in length, and about 100 m. in medium breadth.

	S. Lat.	Sq. m.
Eaheinomauwee	{ 34.20.to } 41.36.	26,160
Tavai Poenammoo	{ 41.30.to } 47.25.
	166.to 180.	36,000

Total, according to Nicholas, 62,160

These islands were visited by Mr. Nicholas, in 1814 & 1815, for the purpose of establishing missionaries among the natives. The general face of the country, as far as explored, is undulating; and the hills rise with a varied ascent from considerable eminences to lofty mountains. A chain of hills extends from N. to S., gradually swelling into lofty mountains, the highest of which, according to Dr. Forster, is Mount Egmont, in Lat. 39. 16. S., said to resemble in appearance the Peak of Teneriffe, & to be of the same elevation. Almost the whole of the northern island appears admirably well calculated for cultivation; the southern island is described by Capt. Cook, as apparently barren. Even here, however, the great height of the trees growing upon it, would indicate a good soil. Mr. Nicholas mentions, that in their excursions into the northern island, they found the soil extremely fertile, producing a luxuriant vegetation; the climate mild, temperate, salubrious, and favourable to the growth of whatever the soil may be adapted to yield. The country is rich in natural productions. Trees grow to an astonishing size; pines of various descriptions, and of species unknown in Europe, far exceed in height the tallest that ever grew on the mountains of Norway. But of the vegetable productions, a species of phormium has excited the most attention. It has sometimes been called flax, and sometimes hemp, and is said to unite the properties of both in a superior degree. But few species of animals have been found; birds are less numerous than in many other parts; but the waters swarm with fish. The inhabitants are savage in their manners, addicted to many gross and revolting superstitions; and are represented as cannibals. The islands are divided among a variety of petty chiefs, continually involved in the most barbarous and bloody wars. Their government is a complete despotism.—Several missionary stations have been established in these islands. The first was formed at the Bay of Islands, in 1814, by the reverend Samuel Marsden. Notwithstanding many obstacles and discouragements, the success of the missionaries has been remarkable. They were settled, in 1819, on a tract of 13,000 acres of land, purchased of one of the chiefs.

Zebid, (an. Sabat,) city, Arabia, in Yemen; 52 N. Mocha. Lon. 43. 15. E. Lat. 14. 12. N. Zebid was once the place of a sovereign's residence, and the most commercial city in all Tehama; but since the harbour of Ghalefke was choked up, its trade has been transferred to Beit el Fakih and Mocha, and this city now retains nothing but the shadow of its former splendour. Viewed from a distance, it appears to some advantage, by means of the mosques and kubbets, of which it is full. Zebid had once 8 gates; of these, only 5 are now standing. It is still distinguished for an academy, or university for the Sunnites, in which the youth of Tehama, and a part of Yemen, study such sciences as are cultivated among the Musselmans. It is besides the seat of a dola, a mufti, and 3 cadis.

Zurich, canton, Switz., bounded N. by Schaffhausen, NE. & E. by Thurgau, SE. by St. Gall, S. by Schwytz and Zug, W. by Aargau, and NW. by Baden. Sq. m. 954. Pop. 185,000, almost all Calvinists. The general aspect is pleasant, abounding in hills and valleys, but destitute of the magnificent scenery that marks the interior and south of Switzerland. The soil is tolerably fertile, and well cultivated. Rich pastures and extensive orchards abound. Corn, wine, cattle, butter, and cheese, are some of the principal products. The manufactures are considerable, of cotton, silk stuffs, linen, woollen, and leather. The government was long aristocratic, but for some time past, the elections have been made by the inhabitants at large.

Zurich, city, Switz., capital of the above canton, on the Limmat, at the north extremity of the lake of Zurich, in a narrow valley between hills; 36 SW. Constance, 41 SE. Bâle, 55 ENE. Berne. Lon. 8. 32. E. Lat. 47. 22. N. Pop. 10,475. H. 1,161. It is pleasantly situated, fortified with a wall and ditch, tolerably neat and clean, though most of the houses are old fashioned. It has 4 Ref. chh.; its public buildings are not remarkable; but the scenery around is striking, and there are beautiful promenades. There are numerous private gardens, and in no place in Europe, except Haarlem, is more attention paid to fine flowers. Having the advantage of water communication by means of its lake and river, it has long been a place of manufacture and trade. Woollens, linens, cottons, leather, and silk are its chief manufactures. Few places of the size of Zurich have surpassed it in the cultivation of literature. For 5 centuries it has been a town of literary distinction. It has a public library of 40,000 volumes, Collegium Humanitatis, gymnasium Carolinum, a school for the deaf and dumb, and one for the blind, a society of physics, economics, and natural history, a military school, a medical seminary, and various other institutions.—Natives, Conrad Gesner, Solomon Gesner, John James Gesner, J. C. Lavater, Hirzel, and Pestalozzi.

Zurich, lake, Switz., extending in the form of a crescent, chiefly through the canton of Zurich, but partly also between those of Schwytz and St. Gall. It is divided into two parts by the strait of Rapperschwyl, a quarter mile over, crossed by a bridge. In other places the breadth varies to nearly 5 miles; the length is 30 miles. This lake, without rivalling that of Geneva in its sublime scenery, is one of the finest in Europe, being surrounded by a populous and well cultivated country, and the prospects on its banks being richly varied. It abounds in fish.

Alton, Madison co. Illinois, for t. read p-t.—This town is situated on the first and second bank of the Mississippi, 4 miles above the junction of the Missouri, 16 below that of the Illinois, 20 miles above St. Louis, 12 NW. Edwardsville, 60 W. Vandalia. It was incorporated in 1821, and has been made a port of entry. It has an elevated and healthy situation, possessing great advantages for a commercial town, having an excellent landing, and a safe and commodious harbour for boats of every description, the only good one on the east side of the river between the Ohio and Illinois. Its trade is already considerable, and promises to become very extensive. The buildings are principally of hewn logs; but there are 15 of frame, 4 of brick, and 2 of stone. The town contains a house of public worship, an incorporated academy, or grammar school, a large whiskey distillery, 2 flour mills propelled by horse power, and in the immediate vicinity are 2 flour mills and 2 saw mills propelled by water. It is well supplied with springs; and $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. distant is a spring issuing from a curious cave; $2\frac{1}{2}$ m. distant is a large bed of coal. Limestone and free stone are in abundance near the town.

Downingtoun, not Downingstown, Pa. It is situated on the Lancaster turnpike, where it crosses the Brandywine, and contains about 100 houses, situated on one street, about a mile long, also a philosophical hall, a printing office, a cloth manufactory, and a number of mills.

Drummond's Island, isl. at the N. extremity of lake Huron, at the mouth of the strait which connects lakes Huron and Superior ; 36 miles in a right line NE. Michilimackinac, 45 by water ; 4 or 5 miles from the Canada shore ; 45 in circuit. On the S. side is a spacious harbour, one of the best in the lake, sheltered from every wind, 3 miles in circ., and entered by two deep channels, about 60 yards wide. The isl. rough, formed chiefly of limestone, but has a fertile soil. Here is a British garrison of about 140 men, with barracks, but there are no other inhabitants. This island is noted as the place to which many thousand Indians, within the circuit of 5, or 600 miles around, resort in the month of June to receive presents of the British government. The amount distributed in goods, is estimated at £4,000 sterling, beside a large sum in provisions.

Gardiner, Maine.—An institution was incorporated, in 1822, by the name of the Gardiner Lyceum, the object of which was stated to be, "to give to mechanics and farmers such a scientific education, as would enable them to become skilful in their professions." A stone edifice has been erected, and the institution is to go into operation in January 1823.

Grand Bassa, country, Western Africa, in the NW. part of the Grain coast, to the south of Sherbro. A settlement was formed here by the American Colonization society, in 1821, by the second body that was sent from America to the African coast; the first having fixed upon Sherbro. The situation and the country are thus described. "The land obtained is a part of the territory, called Grand Bassa, and is supposed to be from 30 to 40 miles square. It is situated on a fine bay, about 5 miles wide, and 3 or 4 deep, between St. John's & Grand Bassa rivers, which fall into the bay. On the east it is high and level, and furnishes a good site for a city. The water in the bay is deep enough to take a ship of war within 2 or 3 m. and a vessel of 100 tons within less than half a mile of the shore. The St. John's river, too, is navigable for small vessels for about 20 miles from its mouth to the falls, where there is a fine seat for mills. The country back is hilly and mountainous. The whole is well provided with good water, and is very fertile. It produces rice of excellent quality, corn, and all kinds of tropical fruits and vegetables. It yields also camwood, ivory, palm oil and wine, in any quantity; and is stocked with sheep, goats, & herds of cattle and swine. The river furnishes the best fish and oysters in great abundance. The natives are mild, friendly, and well disposed; seem to have good natural parts, but are ignorant and superstitious."

Harmony, missionary settlement, Missouri, among the Osage Indians, on the Osage, about 350 miles above its junction with the Missouri. The Osages here live in two villages, about six miles apart.

Hollis, York co. Maine; 7 WNW. Saco.—In this township, on the NW. side of the Saco, are two springs, one of which is chalybeate, the other is remarkable for the phenomena, which it exhibits. It is about 20 feet wide, 60 long, and 4 deep; is moderately cold in summer, never frozen; and a large stream flows from it. The bottom is hard, and is covered with very white sand. There are 5 places, through which the water in succession breaks out with great force. When there is no motion, the water is perfectly clear; suddenly it breaks through with great violence, and becomes turbid, and as white as if a quantity of unslacked lime had been thrown into it. In about ten minutes the orifice is closed, the water again becomes clear, and it is difficult to cause a sharp pole to penetrate a few inches into the sand, where the water had just been gushing out. Within 2 or 3 minutes after the water has ceased to gush out in one place, it breaks forth in another, in the same manner; and thus in succession at the 5 principal points of the spring.

Note. Russia and Turkey lie partly in Europe and partly in Asia. Russia has some settlements in the north-west part of America, and Turkey claims the sovereignty of Egypt.

All the Spanish provinces on the continent of America have declared themselves independent.

Languages. Number of languages and dialects spoken on the globe, according to Adelung, as far as known.

America	1,214
Europe	545
Asia and the South sea islands	991
Africa	276

Total number of languages 3,026

The languages most extensively spoken in Europe are divided into three classes: 1. Those derived from the Latin, viz., the French, Italian, Spanish, and Portuguese, spoken by more than 60 millions: 2. Teutonic languages, viz., the German, Dutch, English, Danish, Swedish, and Norwegian, spoken by upwards of 50 millions: 3. Slavonic languages, viz., Russian, Polish, &c., spoken by more than 40 millions.

POPULATION AND MORTALITY.

Increase of population. The following table of Euler shows in what number of years population will double under given circumstances.

Population of 100,000; mortality 1 to 36.

Deaths to births as	Excess of births.	This excess of the sum of the living.	Years in doubling.
10 to 11	277	$\frac{1}{361}$	$250\frac{1}{12}$
— 12	555	$\frac{1}{180}$	125
— 13	722	$\frac{1}{138}$	96
— 14	1,100	$\frac{1}{90}$	$62\frac{3}{4}$
— 15	1,388	$\frac{1}{72}$	$55\frac{1}{4}$
— 16	1,666	$\frac{1}{60}$	42
— 17	1,943	$\frac{1}{51}$	$35\frac{3}{4}$
— 18	2,221	$\frac{1}{43}$	$31\frac{2}{3}$
— 19	2,499	$\frac{1}{40}$	28
— 20	2,777	$\frac{1}{36}$	$25\frac{3}{10}$
— 22	3,332	$\frac{1}{30}$	$21\frac{1}{8}$
— 25	4,165	$\frac{1}{24}$	17
— 30	5,054	$\frac{1}{18}$	$12\frac{4}{5}$

It is computed that the proportion of male children, born in Europe, to that of female, is as 21 to 20, or 26 to 25; the mortality is also greater among male children, computed in the proportion nearly as 27 to 26; hence it follows, that at the age of 15 years the equality in numbers between the sexes, is nearly established. After wards war and other causes of the destruction of human life, which fall most heavily on the males, occasion the difference to be reversed, and the females to outnumber the males.

If we compute the population of the globe at 700,000,000, the proportion of the number of births to the number of inhabitants as 1 to 29 $\frac{1}{2}$, and that of deaths to the number of inhabitants as 1 to 33, we shall have the following results.

	Births.	Deaths.
In a year	33,728,813	21,212,121
In a day	65,010	58,021
In an hour	2,708	2,421
In a minute	45	40
In a second	$\frac{3}{4}$	$\frac{2}{3}$

According to this calculation the total annual increase of the population of the globe, were it not checked by war and epidemics, would amount to 2,516,692.

If in any district of country there are 10,000 births, it is computed that the total population must be

Children under 15 years	93,003
Persons upwards of 15 years	202,019
Married couples	23,250
Widows	5,812
Widowers	4,359

TABLES OF MORTALITY AND POPULATION IN FRANCE, FROM M. DUVILLARD.

This table, entitled the law of mortality in France, shows what number of one million of children, supposed to be born at the same instant, will be living after a certain number of years. For example, after 20 years, 502,216, i. e. a little more than one half, will be living; after 45 years 334,072, a little more than one third.

To ascertain what number will die between the ages of 40 and 41, for example, find the difference of the numbers standing opposite to 40 and 41, which is 6,985.

To ascertain what number of years a persons of the age of 40 will probably live, mark the number opposite to 40, viz. 369,404. Take half this number, and it will be found, or a number nearly equal, opposite to 63.

From this table, it will be seen that nearly one quarter die the first year, and nearly one third the first two years.

This table, entitled the law of population in France, supposes a population of ten millions, and shows how many of these ten millions are of a given age; for example, 5,981,844 are 20 years old, and 5,808,264, 21 years. The difference between these two numbers, viz. 173,580, is the number between 20 and 21.

In order to ascertain the number between 20 and 21, in a population of 29 millions, nearly the population of France, state the proportion, as 10 millions are to 29 millions, so is the number 173,580 to 503,382. Deduct from this number one half for females; the remainder, 251,691, will show the number of males in France between 20 & 21, which is nearly the actual number.

OF CLIMATES.

A CLIMATE is a portion of the earth's surface, included between two parallels of latitude, and of such a breadth that the longest day, under the parallel nearest the pole, is half an hour longer than under the other. There are 24 such climates between the equator and either of the polar circles. The breadth of the half-hour climates decrease as they approach the poles. Between the polar circle and the pole, there are 6 climates of such breadth, that the longest day, under these two parallels, varies by a month. There are thus 30 climates in all on each side of the equator.

TABLE OF CLIMATES.

The first column shews the number of the climate, the second the length of the day, under the highest parallel, or that nearest the pole; the third, the latitude of that parallel; and the fourth, the breadth of the climate.
